The New Look in Cars is That Packard Look

YOUR Packard dealer takes great pride in welcoming you to his special Summer Showing of the brilliant new Packards and Packard Clippers for '54.

These are exciting cars—quality-built as only Packard can build them. They offer you far more power, more advanced engineering features, more convenience and relaxed driving comfort than any cars in Packard's 55-year history! And they are truly beautiful! That Packard look is the superb refinement of advanced contour styling—pioneered by Packard and now setting the trend in all of today's automotive design!

This is the most complete line of Packards ever built, with 14 models, 26 color combinations and 52 custom-tailored interiors available.

Let Packard Prove It!

Extra Packards and Packard Clippers are available at your dealer's during his Summer Showing. You are invited to discover for yourself why these are America's most rewarding cars to own.

See "THE PACKARD PROGRAM," starring Martha Wright on ABC Television, Sunday 9:15 P.M. New York time. See newspaper for your local time and station.

A MESSAGE FROM THE GRAND EXALTED RULER

THE Elks have asked the American people to display the Flag on Flag Day as a mark of respect to our national ensign on its 177th anniversary. We have appealed to our fellow citizens to "Show Your Colors". Are we Elks prepared to do what we ask others to do?

Our "Show Your Colors" campaign is directed first to our own members, and it will not succeed unless Elks themselves lead the way.

First of all, every Elks Lodge should have a Flag, clean and in good repair, ready to unfurl above its home on June 14. Is your Lodge prepared?

Second, every Elk family should have a Flag, clean and in good repair, to display on June 14. Are you prepared for Flag Day?

If our Lodges and our members are prepared to show their colors on Flag Day, then, and only then, are we in position to ask our neighbors to show their colors. And we should ask our neighbors to show their colors.

Every Elks Lodge should canvass its own members, getting them to pledge that they will display the Flag on June 14.

Then each Lodge should appeal to the citizens in its community, personally if possible, and to every business house and public official to pledge that they will fly the Flag over their homes and the buildings under their control on the day that is set aside to pay homage to Old Glory.

To fly the Flag is a simple act of affirmation that we are Americans; that we believe in freedom and justice; that we love our country. I expect every Elk family to join in this act of affirmation on June 14.

It was 18 years ago, in 1936, when the Grand Lodge last met in Los Angeles. Our membership then was 466,000. When the 90th Grand Lodge Convention opens in Los Angeles on July 4, the membership of this great American fraternity will stand at 1,140,000. Ours is a truly magnificent record of growth and development. Delegates to the Grand Lodge will have the responsibility of deciding policies and programs that will serve to make our Order an even more effective instrument in the service of our fellowmen, and for the protection of our Republic.

Our California Brothers, under the leadership of Past Grand Exalted Ruler L. A. Lewis, have made lavish preparation for our comfort and convenience in the transaction of our business affairs. They have enlisted the abundant resources of their beautiful empire to provide superlative entertainment and recreation for their Convention guests.

I look forward to meeting as many of you as possible at what I am confident will be a most inspiring and enjoyable Convention.

Sincerely and fraternally,

EARL E. JAMES
GRAND EXALTED RULER

What Our Readers

Have to Say

At a recent meeting of our lodge it was moved, seconded and carried that the lodge purchase four copies of "The History of the Order of Elks", as per the coupon clipped from The Elks Magazine at the rate of $3.62 per copy.

The motion also carried the stipulation that a copy be presented to the three libraries of the city and one be kept in the Secretary's office. We have a City Public Library, a College Library and a High School Library. It is thought that a proper presentation by a representative committee of the Elks might deserve some public recognition.

T. Nelson Douglas, Secy.
Hillsdale, Mich.

Discussing the ritual the other evening, the point of the Antlers, Bible and Flag on the altar was raised and whether or not it was proper to place anything on our national Emblem—the thought being that the American Flag should always fly free. May we have your opinion on this matter?

Joseph Salese, P.E.R.
Beacon, N. Y.

This is a question that has been raised many times since the ritual of placing the Flag on the altar was initiated in the late 1890's. The question is thoroughly discussed in the "History of the Order of Elks". To answer Brother Salese briefly, these facts may be stated:

About 1920, Past Grand Exalted Ruler Holland contacted responsible Army personnel and received a definite ruling that, since the Order was paying nothing but reverent respect to the Flag when it was placed on the altar, there was absolutely no reason why this part of the ritual was improper. While it is true that the Army insists that within its own organization the Flag must always fly free, it advised Mr. Holland that it does not establish rules and regulations for civilian practice, as long as the use is respectful. Thus, it has been established that it is completely legitimate to place the Flag on the altar, under the Bible and Antlers.

May I take this means to compliment you and your entire staff on the fine Elks Magazine you publish. It is truly a splendid man's magazine, with interesting stories and informative articles on current topics and exciting places, as well as providing good coverage of Elkdom's events and activities.

TOM WRIGLEY WRITES FROM WASHINGTON

RESULTS of primary contests for the November elections, now reaching a full boil, show no great upheaval one way or the other in the political lineups. There may be a flop here and there but no earthquakes. With most of the big battles still to come, Capitol Hill is a cauldron of rumor and predictions. Congress plans to close shop in a month and a half, or at the latest the last of July, and right now the legislative vision is strongly cross-eyed. One eye looks at the pile of important bills still pending while the other eye turns to the hinterland and the mending of political fences. The November election, an in-between Presidential set to, is no brush-off this time. It is rated the most important in history. There are 35 Senators to be chosen and a new House of Representatives of 435 members. Old campaigners in Senate and House say that with all the new techniques, nothing beats the personal visit and the handshake with constituents. The candidate who greets the most gets the most votes, they say.

WE RULE THE AIR

This nation has the largest force in the world for mass air transportation. The Military Air Transport Services now operates a fleet of 1,300 planes. In addition, the Aircraft Industries Association announces that over 300 of the nation's largest commercial air transports stand ready to be turned into military service at a moment's notice. This fleet is capable of transporting an entire division of troops, or more than 5.75 million pounds of cargo, coast to coast in less than 12 hours. The interesting part of all this is that most of these commercial planes have already had modifications which make them suitable for installation of military equipment.

MISQUOTED QUOTATIONS

Abraham Lincoln is the most misquoted of all Presidents, according to the Library of Congress reference service. For instance, that expression "You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich" actually was used for the first time by the Rev. William John Henry Boetcker in a book in 1916. The National Archives Building has carved in one of its stones "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty" supposed to be from Thomas Jefferson.

John Philpot Curran said it. Jefferson did not say "That government is best which governs least" as so many people believe. It came from the Fra Elbert Hubbard, of East Aurora, N. Y. Ben Franklin is supposed to have said before the Continental Congress "We must all hang together or most assuredly we shall all hang separately". There is no record that he said it, according to the library, which answers some 50,000 inquiries a year.

ALIEN TRICKS EXPOSED

Congressmen are giving careful examination to appeals from aliens for private bills to permit them to remain in the United States. Such bills automatically prevent deportation and in some cases the alien turns out to be a criminal, a communist, a ship-jumper or other kind of undesirable. Since some of these aliens were exposed, many private bills have been withdrawn and the number of appeals has been considerably reduced.

EARTH'S OLDEST PLANTS

Dr. A. C. Smith, curator of the National Museum, says the Fiji Islands are the birthplace of flowering plants, for portions of the land there were above the sea 100 million years ago. He has returned with 24,000 specimens and the plant of the ages is called the "degeneria", a forest tree with beautiful white flowers.

SENATE HAS RED FOUNTAIN

As if we haven't had enough reds in government, the big fountain in the park beside the Senate Office Building is now spouting crimson colored water. It almost set off another investigation. Could it be the fountain is radioactive? It is not. The idea is to have colored water so the flood lights will make the streams more spectacular at night.

UNCLE SAM'S BOOKS

Government Printing Office, Division of Public Documents, lists these books as tops in interest—"Infant Care", revised and brought up to date, sales in the millions, 20 cents; "Care and Repair of the House" (men go for this), 50 cents; "Family Fare", (women go for this for it tells what to do about leftovers), 25 cents; "Trees", a real book in colors on forestation, $2.00; "Selling the U. S. Market", for manufacturers and sales managers, $1.00. That "Infant Care" number, however, still tops the list. The baby business is always good.

PRESS AGENT'S DREAMS

The White House is a press agent's dream as a background for a publicity picture and Press Secretaries Jim Hagerly and Murray Snyder are constantly on guard to prevent any fast ones. Cabinet members and Senators and Representatives in Congress are also alert to prevent abuse of legitimate picture opportunities. There hasn't been a real smart press agent picture taken since, some years ago, a circus midget, at a Senate committee hearing, climbed on the lap of one of the leading financiers of the country and the photographers snapped the picture.

VICTORY OVER TEMPOS

The monument to the First Infantry Division hidden for years by temporary barracks built around it has emerged at last from obscurity. Workmen have torn down the tempo on the west side and when the veterans of the First Division meet here August 20 they will celebrate their victory over the tempos.

POTOMAC PRUNINGS

Mrs. Eisenhower bought one and so now the summer fashion in hats may be big cartwheel sailors . . . The Navy has enough anchors to last 20 years in open storage out in Utah . . . Travel by Americans to Europe will break all records this summer . . . Those new swords for full dress naval officers cost around $50 and they don't bend when you trip over them . . . You won't know the Treasury building when next you see it, for after 50 years of dirt and grime it has been cleaned at a cost of $68,000 and now even the starlings can't find a place to roost around the pillars . . . Women are more keenly awake to the needs of Civil Defense than men, judged by the way they came to Washington from every part of the country to attend a recent CD conference . . . Bassoon makers are having a record production year. It's a wooden instrument in which the music goes in and comes right out without going around and around . . . Smithsonian Institution has 33,000,000 exhibits.

To an ambitious man who would like to settle down and build something substantial for himself . . .

IF YOU ARE THAT MAN, I'LL SET YOU UP IN A BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN—FREE

SHOWN HERE ARE SOME OF THE "BIG NAME" COMPANIES THAT BUY ADVERTISING WORK UNIFORMS

Complete sales equipment furnished at my expense — No charge. . . No deposit . . . Send your name today!

I don't have a single thing to sell you. It will cost me a substantial amount of money to give you your start because I supply everything you need, free of charge. But if you are earnest about a big future in a lasting business, we can both make money.

By Del V. Bergstrom

Perhaps you have wondered where the men who fill your gas tank get the uniforms they wear—those with a company name or emblem embroidered on the back. You have seen these walking billboards in a lot of other places—on garage mechanics—on delivery men who work for soft drink, coal, dairy and bakery companies and on men who work in shops and factories. This advertising work uniform idea originated with this company. We have built a big business around that idea. Now you can get into this same profitable, fast growing business yourself. And it will not cost you a penny to get started.

A Business that Started on a Shoestring

Twenty five years ago, our business was launched with nothing but an idea back of it. From a "shoestring" start, it has become a national institution. Every big national company you can name or think of uses advertising work uniforms. Our Dealer organization is nationwide, too. Our top-ranking men average around $10,000 or $12,000 a year. They own and operate their own business—we merely supply their customers with the Product. Each man's business is his own. It is the kind of business you can have if you are willing to follow my simple instructions. And you can get started now.

A Fine Organization to be With

We are the oldest and largest company of its kind in the world. A large percentage of the Advertising Work Uniforms you see every day came from our shops. Our men—men like yourself—make money on every one that's sold. Repeat orders are sure and certain because Advertising Work Uniforms get hard wear. They must be replaced regularly. The demand for this type of uniform is growing so fast that more men are needed all the time to handle the ever-increasing volume of orders.

A Place for Every Man

No matter where you live—in a small town or a big city—there is a fine, steady flow of orders waiting for you. For example, recently one of our new men—on his very first call—took an order from a small dairy in a little town in Illinois. His profit on that one small order was $758.00. And that was only a start. He also made a steady customer who will give him a repeat order twice a year from now on. It's this big money that makes our top men stay with us year after year. O. K. Cook is one of them. For many years he has spent his winters in Florida, yet his business went right on because of his steady repeat orders. Now he has retired permanently—thanks to the money he made as a Geo. Master dealer.

I Want Men Like Cook

Now I invite you to be the owner of a Geo. Master Business in your community. If you live in a territory where we need a man, you can get started at once. I'll send you the complete business equipment you need entirely at my expense. And don't worry about lack of experience in this field. I show you exactly how to start, how to build, and how to control your repeat business.

I Want Serious-Minded Men

It costs me quite a large sum of money to set you up in this business because I furnish—without cost to you—all the equipment you need to get started. It is the very same equipment all other Master men are using. I don't hold anything back just because you are a beginner.

In return for my investment in you, I ask only that you are honest and sincere about the business and that you are willing to try it for 10 days with the free equipment I send you. Then if you don't like the business, simply return the equipment to me and you will not be out a penny.

Let Me Know What You Think

We are just starting the biggest season this company has ever known. That is why I want to add about fifty new men right now in communities where we have no representation at the present time.

This may be the big opportunity you have been looking for. Send your name on the coupon and see. If you have time, write a note with it and tell me something about yourself. I promise to hold in strict confidence anything you care to tell me. But please do this at once as the matter is urgent. You will hear from me by return mail.

IMPORTANT

Only a limited number of territories available at this time. To avoid possible disappointment, mail coupon now.

Dear Mr. Bergstrom:

I would like to investigate the possibilities for building a business of my own in my territory. Please send me a Complete Outfit so I can make a test and see for myself what opportunities there are in the Advertising Work Uniform Business. Everything you send me is free, and will cost me nothing—now or ever.

THE FUTURE LOOKS GOOD

BY HARRY E. HUMPHREYS, JR.

PRESIDENT UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
DIRECTOR NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS

SINCE the close of World War II, our nation has been periodically subjected to rumors and predictions of an impending collapse of our economy. The fact that the impending collapse has time and again failed to materialize has apparently had little effect on the gloom merchants.

At each temporary adjustment point in our postwar economy, they have returned to their predictions. Then when the economy resumed its upward surge these prophets have packed their crystal balls and retired to wait for another brief moment when the productivity rate or employment totals might show the slightest percentage of decline so they could again pitch their tents and resume trade.

There has always been a ready market for the doom-prophet in history. Few nations have felt so secure that they were unwilling to give attention to a warning of disaster ahead.

In our time talk of impending depression has become the most common staple of the street corner pessimist. Such talk has a real meaning for all. Everyone can quickly grasp the implications of an economic downturn in terms of his own job security and earnings.

Because the pessimist, with his depression talk, hits so closely at the highly sensitive pocketbook nerve, he cannot be lightly dismissed. However dismal his postwar batting average, he can do the nation great harm by planting fear even if the facts do not substantiate his gloomy prophecy.

The continued health of our economy largely depends upon the mood of a vast consumer market. Let the fear of a depression take root in the consumer and the complex machinery of business and industry immediately slows down. Goods pile up on the retailer's shelf; orders to the manufacturers are cancelled; employee lay-offs follow; and where before there was only talk, a real depression now becomes a possibility.

The only way the fear instilled by the prophet of depression can be combatted is for the people to know the facts. Is our economy geared to an inevitable cycle of boom and then bust? Where are we headed as a nation?

Anyone who takes a long term look at our economy will be immediately impressed by the rapid and continuing population growth. In the past eight years, our population has increased by more than 20 millions. Last year our nation recorded its largest annual population gain with an increase of more than 2,700,000 persons.

Today we are still caught in the powerful currents of that boom. By 1975, experts in the U.S. Census Bureau estimate we will have reached the 200 million mark, which represents a 40-million

BASEBALL'S Hall of Fame

The Babe Ruth "King of Swat" trophy presented by admirers at the peak of his career.

Baseball's Hall of Fame as it fronts on Main Street, in Cooperstown, New York.

This year about 150,000 people will travel to Cooperstown village to relive baseball history.

BY HAROLD ROSENTHAL

HOLLYWOOD, as every visitor knows, is an area simply crawling with stunning women and traffic to match. The traffic crawls along boulevards, drives and avenues threading between canyon walls and the canyons aren't movie props. They've always been there and presumably impeded the cross-country progress of the original Indians and the Spanish dons in much the same manner as they now do the current inhabitants.

Helicopter busses ultimately will provide the answer to getting from one place to another in Hollywood in a hurry as they so often will but meanwhile . . .

A car pulled up at the corner of Hollywood and Vine and a slightly harassed driver called out to a fellow idling in the sun:

"Hey, bud, how can I get to Jalmia Drive? It's one of those roads up a canyon."

The lounge tossed away his toothpick.

"Jalmia Drive? That's easy. Take the next turn left, go three blocks and then turn right . . . er, no."

He started over again. "Jalmia? Let's see. Take the next right and go to the first traffic light and then swing left . . . No, that isn't it either.

"Jalmia?" he said, making a third start. "You keep straight ahead until you hit the second traffic light and then turn right. Keep going until you see the overpass . . . No, that isn't it either."

He scratched his head. "Jalmia, Jalmia . . . Gosh pal, I guess you can't get there from here!"

With a 3,000-mile switch in locale, plus minor adjustments for time, scenery and characters, the same can almost be said for Cooperstown, N.Y., Otsego County seat in the heart of the historic Leatherstocking country.

Why Cooperstown, N.Y.? Because approximately 150,000 people will be asking directions for getting to that village this year. While you're reading this right now there's probably a motorist or two wondering whether he made the right turn-off coming off U.S. 20 at Springfield Center for those last dozen miles down along the shore of Otsego Lake.

Why Cooperstown, N.Y.? Because on Aug. 9 the world championship New York Yankees, proud holders of five straight World Series flags, will tumble off an early sleeper in Utica, N.Y., en route home from a Western trip, to play a game in Cooperstown. Before they get there, however, there'll be an additional two-

GRAND EXALTED RULER Earl E. James visited EASTON MD., LODGE, NO. 1622 on March 14th to preside over the ceremony which marked the burning of the mortgage on the lodge home. He was assisted by E.R. James J. Raughley and P.E.R. Paul J. Randall, during whose term the mortgage was incurred to finance additions to the lodge building.

Mr. James signs the register at Ossining, N. Y., Lodge. Looking on are Exalted Ruler Harry H. Barrett, center, and Esquire Samuel J. Tritto.

Other prominent Elks in attendance included Past Grand Exalted Rulers Robert South Barrett and Howard R. Davis, Past Grand Esteemed Loyal Knight Charles C. Hawthorne and William Edgar Slaughter, President of the Delaware-Maryland-District of Columbia Elks Association. More than 300 members and guests witnessed the ceremony which was followed by a buffet supper.

Next day, Mr. James visited ANNAPOLIS, MD., LODGE NO. 622. He was greeted by Mayor Arthur G. Ellington; Mr. James also visited the Governor's office and the Naval Academy where he was welcomed by the Superintendent, Vice-Admiral C. Turner Joy. P.E.R. R. Edward Dove, who is also Past President of the Elks Tri-State Association and a Past District Deputy, presided at the banquet that evening in honor of Mr. James. Seated at the speaker's table were Past Grand Exalted Rulers Howard R. Davis and Robert South Barrett, Special D.D. Ambrose Durkin, Tri-State Association Pres. William Edgar Slaughter, Past Grand Esteemed Loyal Knight Charles C. Hawthorne, and Exalted Ruler Victor C. Barnes.

Mr. James' next visit was to ALTUS,

OKLA., LODGE, NO. 1226, on March 22nd. He was met outside the city by officers and members of the lodge headed by E.R. C. A. Peters, who escorted him into town. Mr. James made a radio broadcast over station KWHW that evening. Later on a banquet was given in his honor; a formal meeting followed at which a large class of candidates from Altus, Lawton, Mangum, El Reno, Clinton, Duncan and Woodward Lodges were initiated. The ceremony was conducted by Duncan Lodge's Ritualistic Team.

On March 26th, Grand Exalted Ruler James, accompanied by Past Grand Exalted Ruler John R. Coen, paid a visit to Denver, Colo., and to Laradon Hall, the State Assn. Hospital for handicapped children. They then proceeded to Colorado Springs, Colo., for a dinner in the Grand Exalted Ruler's honor on March 27th at COLORADO SPRINGS LODGE NO. 309. Among the prominent Elks who attended the function were State Association President J. A. Drehle, District Deputy David G. Patterson, State Association Past President C. F. Rice and Exalted Ruler Vincent G. Mueller.

The Grand Exalted Ruler arrived in Casper, Wyo., on Sunday afternoon,

Dedicate Plaque In Memory of Past Grand Exalted Ruler Raymond Benjamin

On April 17, a bronze plaque in memory of Past Grand Exalted Ruler Raymond Benjamin was dedicated in the Elks National Memorial Building, Chicago. Mr. Benjamin headed the Order in 1914-1915.

More than 50 persons attended the unveiling and dedicatory exercises, including: Grand Exalted Ruler Earl E. James; Past Grand Exalted Rulers J. Edgar Masters, Floyd E. Thompson, Henry C. Warner, and Joseph B. Kyle; Mrs. Hazel Benjamin, widow of Mr. Benjamin; his daughter, Mrs. John L. MacDonald; Dr. Preston Bradley, minister for the Services, and the Benjamin Memorial Committee—Past Grand Exalted Ruler John F. Malley, Chairman, Past Grand Exalted Ruler James R. Nicholson, and Brother T. F. Werner, Past Exalted Ruler of Mr. Benjamin's lodge, Napa, Calif., No. 832.

ROD & GUN

BY TED TRUEBLOOD

Ted not only likes bass, but he knows them.

ALL KINDS of fishing are fun, but some kinds are more fun than others. At the top of the list, for my money, is top-water fishing for bass—with a plug. I know that a lot of anglers prefer bug fishing and it's all right. I like it. You're fishing the surface so you see all of your strikes and you're using more delicate tackle. But there is something about the way in which an old large-mouth smashes a plug that never fails to make my hands tremble. I think the strike to the plug is more violent, more explosive, than that to a bug, dry fly, pork chunk or anything else that can be fished on the surface.

I was fishing with a friend recently who has the well-deserved reputation of being a terrific fisherman. His name is Bill Schaadt and he lives in Monte Rio, California. Every angler on the coastal rivers in that area knows him, and whenever a question about fishing comes up the standard procedure is to ask Bill Schaadt. Sometimes it gets a little tiresome.

We were fishing for steelheads in the Gualala River when a fellow came along the bank and started firing questions at Bill. He answered several, some of which were sensible and some of which were not, meanwhile attempting to continue fishing his fly properly—a job that requires undivided attention. Finally, the man on the bank said, "When are some more fresh fish coming in?"

Without even turning his head, Bill said, "I don't know. I haven't asked any of them lately."

I'm a little like that when it comes to explaining why a bass hits a floating plug harder than he does anything else. I haven't asked any of them lately. I believe, however, that the relatively large, water-disturbing plug excites them much more than a bug, pork chunk or underwater lure. I think they probably watch it in indecision—most of the time—until they simply can't stand the suspense any more. Then they try to kill it.

There is a great variety of floating lures that were designed to catch bass. I'm sure all of them do. I likewise believe that some are better than others in various places. But occasionally when bass won't hit the favorite they will take something else.

On the waters I fish most, my favorite has long been a minnow-shaped plug with a spinner at each end. I can usually get bass on it when I can't get them on any other and sometimes it works when the others don't. A couple of years ago, my uncle Burt and I went bass fishing on the Fourth of July. We came to a little pothole along the river and he started combing one end of it while I began at the other. There was one spot at my end that looked especially good, and I dropped my plug into it seven or eight times. Nothing happened.

WE fished to the middle, passed and then each of us continued walking along the bank, casting as he went, until he came to the end where the other had started. When Burt got to my end, he dropped his popping plug into the good-looking spot that I had just fished so thoroughly. He twitched it a couple of times and the water exploded. A few minutes later, he landed a bass that weighed exactly five pounds.

Being a gentleman and a scholar, he said, "You really teased him into hitting. I just happened to come along when he was ready. If you'd made one more cast, you'd have got him."

A nice sentiment, but I don't believe it. I think that bass had plenty of chances to take my plug, but that it somehow didn't touch off the reflex that would have made him do it. Burt's dish-faced popper did.

My preference for the floating plug with a spinner at each end stems from the fact that it can be fished so many different ways. Sometimes the bass want a lot of commotion; at other times too much disturbance of the surface seems to frighten them and they won't strike. The plug with fore and aft spinners can be fished with hard jerks and made to kick up a terrific fuss. It can be worked with little twitches so that it barely ruffles the water, and it can be manipulated in all degrees between these two extremes, slow or fast, steadily or in a series of pulls.

I have come to the conclusion, however, that this one lure is not enough, even in the relatively small area where I do most of my bass fishing. If I were to start on a grand tour of the country with the intention of fishing for bass everywhere they occur—what a delightful thought!—I'd certainly want a good selection, both in size and type.

One of the most popular top-water plugs everywhere in the South has a horizontal groove across its face and is rather slender. It has a darting, side-to-side action just beneath the surface when it is reeled steadily, but when it is jerked it can be made to pop, splash, leap and dart. It is not used much in the North and, although I've tried it there, it has never done very well.

Another good southern lure—and this

CALLING ALL ELKS:

On behalf of Robert S. Redington, Executive Director, and on behalf of all the members of our Los Angeles 1954 Convention Committee, and personally, I most cordially invite all Elks to visit our great State of California in July 1954 and to attend the National Convention of our Order in Los Angeles July 4th to 8th.

We have been working for over eight months to give you a convention that will please you. We want to extend to you a genuine California hospitality -- the hospitality reminiscent of the early Dons of our beloved California -- the hospitality where they took the stranger into their home and gave him everything, even their best room, and then when he left were offended if he did not take a gold coin from the glass on the table.

We have planned beach trips, harbor trips, trips to the early California missions, Knott's Berry Farm, the studios, television centers, and homes of the motion picture stars.

We will stage a magnificent pageant depicting the story of Elkdom. You will be our guests at this production under the stars at the famous Hollywood Bowl.

Our arms are extended to all of you in cordial welcome.

Sincerely and fraternally,

"BOY-MEETS-GIRL STORY"

... the romantic side of the Elk Fraternal Center picture

JUNE is traditionally the month for romance, so our theme is the boy-meets-girl proclivity of our Elk Fraternal Centers where servicemen have the opportunity to meet and enjoy the company of our lovely American girls who are doing such a wonderful job as the Elks' Junior Hostesses.

The friendly, holiday spirit of these Fraternal Center affairs, which are conducted with propriety and chaperoned by members of the Order and their wives, makes for a sociability that often ends in sincere and lasting friendship—sometimes even in marriage.

Below: This Christmas formal at the Center conducted by Columbia, S. C., Lodge developed into an engagement party for one of the Junior Hostesses and a Corporal from Fort Jackson. The couple had met at one of the Elk parties in the Spring and had promptly fallen in love. The corporal planned to give the young lady her ring on Christmas Day, but a few days earlier, when they arrived at the Center for this event, he decided the setting was perfect for the occasion, returned to the Fort, got the ring and presented it to his lady with the blessing of the Elks who had brought them together.

Above: The girls dress in their finest for the more formal affairs, such as the one celebrating the anniversary of the opening of Waukegan, Ill., Lodge's fine Center—and the young men appreciate it, too, as evidenced by the expressions on the faces of some of the sailors who attended.

Above: A semi-formal at the Columbus, Ga., Elks' Fraternal Center found this fine looking group of servicemen with the pretty young ladies who are among the many who help the Elks' guests forget the distance separating them from their homes. These well-planned affairs are perfect substitutes for the young folks' parties which are so much a part of our community life.

Above: Getting to know each other at the Tucson, Ariz., Center is easy and pleasant. A lot of time can be wasted with that initial awkward stiffness that often takes over when you're in a strange place, meeting strange people. The Tucson Elks take care of that difficulty very nicely—who can be stiff and formal during a spirited square-dance?

KNIGHT OF THE PLAINS

BY J. FRANK DOBIE
Historian of the Southwest

CABALLERO means cavalier, and the original meaning of both words is horseman. Prehistoric horses had disappeared from the Americas thousands of years before Columbus sailed. On his second voyage (1493) caballeros brought the first horses to the Western hemisphere and at once began raising them on Santo Domingo. Before Cortés landed in Mexico in 1519, introducing the first horses to the mainland, various horse ranches existed in the West Indies.

The English, French, and Dutch introduced horses also. Some went wild, but the mustangs of the West and the corresponding wild horses of South American pampas were straight Spanish. These Spanish horses found no natural enemies powerful enough to check increase. They multiplied as spectacularly as English sparrows introduced to the United States and rabbits to Australia later multiplied.

Only twenty years after Cortés conquered Mexico, Coronado set out to explore the West with an expedition that took along 1,000 horses and 500 pack animals. At the same time De Soto, setting out from Cuba, was exploring the (Continued on page 52)

NEWS OF THE LODGES

Queens Borough, N. Y., Elks Give $3,500,000 to Charity in 17 Years

Over 2,000 persons saw nearly $200,000 distributed among 110 charities by Queens Borough Lodge No. 878 at its 1954 Pageant of Giving. Past Grand Exalted Ruler James T. Hallinan presided at the ceremonies which brought to well over $3,500,000 his lodge's 17-year charity total.

"This is Elkdom at its best," commented Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Jr., P.E.R. of New York Lodge No. 1, who was on hand to express the gratitude of the City of New York, whose institutions and welfare organizations made it the largest beneficiary. Two other Past Grand Exalted Rulers, James R. Nicholson and George I. Hall, Grand Trustee William J. Jernick and James A. Gunn of the Grand Lodge Committee on Lodge Activities, together with Borough Pres. James A. Lundy and other civic officials, were welcomed by retiring E.R. Thomas J. Mackell to this distribution program during which several pleasant musical intervals were supplied by the Catholic Diocesan Choristers of Brooklyn, directed by Rev. C. C. Toomey.

It is the Queens Borough Elks' annual Charity Bazaar which makes these donations possible. Again efficiently and successfully conducted by its perennial Chairman, P.E.R. Frank J. Rauch, the 1953 affair brought assistance to the following non-Elk organizations, each of which had an authorized representative on hand.

Several Elk programs, and the various charity projects of the lodge itself, benefited too, with its Youth Committee Chairman, John F. Scileppi, former Chairman of the Grand Lodge Committee on this work, accepting a $10,000 donation for No. 878's efforts on behalf of our young people. In addition to a $50,000 gift for its own particular 1954 charities, and a $2,500 donation to the Elks National Foundation, the Queens Borough Elks gave $500 to the N. Y. State Elks Scholarship Program, another $1,000 to its own Scholarship Fund, a $500 gift to the Elks National Service Commission, and $750 allocated to the N. Y. Elks' Veterans Service Program.

LODGE NOTES

Highlight of the winter season for Bellingham, Wash., Lodge was the initiation of a 129-man Birthday Class by E.R. Cy Post and his officers in the presence of Past Grand Exalted Ruler Emmett T. Anderson.

Easton, Md., Lodge's Ritualistic Team won the Md., Dela. and D. C. Elks Assn. title in the contest which took place at the home of Washington, D. C., Elkdom recently.

Sam Miller, P.D.D. and former Grand Lodge Committeeman, is bringing a great deal of credit to the Order, particularly his own lodge, Hattiesburg, Miss. Director of United Cerebral Palsy of his State, representing the Miss. Elks Assn., he has just been elected Representative-Director of the Board of Directors of the United CP's national organization.

The Texas State Elks Bowling Contest will be held the 3rd, 4th and 5th of this month at McAllen, with a prize fund of $1,000. Interested keglers may contact Tom Burns at McAllen Lodge No. 1402.

Jacksonville Beach, Fla., Lodge was instituted last June with 113 Charter Members. On Mar. 26th, the ninth class of the year, honoring James C. Dickinson, Sr., was initiated, bringing the total membership to 194. These Elks expect to double the original roster by its first anniversary.

When Fair Lawn, N. J., Lodge celebrated its first anniversary not long ago, a handsome American Flag and lodge banner were dedicated. The National Emblem, the gift of E.R. and Mrs. Geo. J. Scognio and Trustee and Mrs. Joseph P. Gallone, honored the memory of a former Paterson Elk, Louis Curci. The lodge flag was the gift of Trustee and Mrs. Solomon Epstein.

Portsmouth Lodge was host to the Ohio So. Cent. Ritualistic Contest won by Jackson's team, with Chillicothe taking second place.

Woonsocket, R. I., Lodge has a member who is doing his best to assist the Blood Campaign. Chairman of the lodge's committee for this work last year during his term as Exalted Ruler, Orlando DeStefani offered to each donor to the Drive last March a pound of the best sirloin steak, to be selected from the refrigerators of his own shop.

New Orleans, La., Lodge plays a large part in the world-famous Mardi Gras celebration. Each year, the lodge selects three youngsters from orphanages of different faiths to act as the King and his pages in the Elks Krewe of Orleansians Parade on Mardi Gras Day. The 1954 King, above, is 13-year-old John Rodosta, his pages are Alcide Ballinger and Billy Holland, both nine, selected by the New Orleans Elks from two local Catholic orphanages.

ELK HISTORY Gets Around

Three copies of "The History of the Order of Elks" were presented to the West Haven, Conn., Library by the members of the local Elks lodge. Pictured on this occasion were, left to right, Librarian Miss Ora Mason, Elk Trustee Clifford Whitehead, retiring E.R. Fred T. Coxeter and Harry J. Kenney, Publicity Director of the lodge which made the gift primarily to acquaint the community's young people with the Order's principles.

Left: Another copy of the History went to the Washington County Free Library. W. H. Hawthorne, E.R. of Hagerstown, Md., Lodge, left foreground, handed the book to Librarian Mrs. Mary Louise Holzapfel, expressing his wish that it be placed on the circulating shelves so that it will be available to all citizens of the county for their reading pleasure, and as an inspiration to those who share the ideals represented by the Order. Other Elks on hand were, left to right: Est. Lead. Knight F. L. Moats, Est. Loyal Knight J. J. Bean, E. T. Winters and R. L. Schindel.

Long-time Elk Alexander Crossan, Editor of Sacramento, Calif., Lodge's fine bulletin, is seeing to it that one candidate of each class initiated into his lodge will have an immediate and solid education in Elkdom by presenting for drawing by the initiates an autographed copy of the History. This photograph was taken when Elmo Rulé, lucky member of the E.R. Frank J. Luttig Class, received the first volume in March. Mr. Crossan also inscribed the book, his well-phrased remarks reading in part:

"This History is given in the hope you shall find within its pages the true meaning of Elkdom as you peruse the story of more than eight decades of devotion to Americanism, Fidelity, Benevolence, Justice and Brotherly Love". Incidentally, this was a bright spot in Elmo Rulé's day. Having reached the age for compulsory retirement, he had been obliged to relinquish his post with the United States Bureau of Engineers only forty days short of his fiftieth anniversary with that group.

Oklahoma Elks Convene for 1954

Grand Exalted Ruler Earl E. James was the guest of honor at the 47th Annual Convention of the Okla. Elks Assn. at which his home lodge, Oklahoma City No. 417, was host. The three-day event opened Mar. 19th with approximately 650 persons registered. Highlight of the first day's activities was the Ritualistic Contest which terminated the following morning, with Woodward Lodge's entry winning top honors over six other competitors; Duncan Lodge took second place, and Shawnee, third. Three members of Oklahoma City Lodge's group made the All-State Team, with two from Woodward, and one each from Duncan and Holdenville.

On the 20th, the delegates and their ladies attended an outstanding program in the Municipal Auditorium, when an Honor Guard of the Elkettes, Holden-ville Lodge's trim girl's Drill Team, escorted Grand Exalted Ruler James to the stage to deliver the welcoming address, following his introduction by State Pres. D. E. McCroskey. E.R. James S. Tate was Master of Ceremonies for the thrilling events which followed, when a historical panorama, entitled "Oklahoma Cavalcade of Elkdom", placed before the audience the highlights of the Order's progress in that State from its inception to the present day. Ben Morris was the Narrator for the extravaganza, directed by Mary Gray Thompson and featuring the Oklahoma City University Choir.

The delegates decided to hold the 1955 meeting in Tulsa, with a fall gathering at Holdenville, and plan to purchase a suitable site for a summer camp for boys.

The new officers are Pres., C. R. Horton, El Reno; 1st Vice-Pres., John Coons, Miami; 2nd Vice-Pres., Temple Benbrook, Woodward; 3rd Vice-Pres., Bert Wysor, Holdenville; Sgt.-at-Arms, Clyde Dowdy, Holdenville; Secy., V. P. Cavanaugh, El Reno; Treas., Clair Hill, Shawnee. Trustees are Herman Salz, Woodward; Harry Paine, Lawton, R. G. Maitt, Oklahoma City; L. A. Wood, Bristow, and Herbert Johnson, Sapulpa.

NEWARK, N. Y., ELKS RELEASE. OTHER LODGES PLEASE COPY

March 18, 1954

With the end of the 1953-54 Grand Lodge year, retiring E.R. Albert Kreiss announces that Newark, N. Y., Lodge, No. 1249, has its entire membership of 590 Elks paid up to April 1st.

In the Doghouse

Pups can influence youngsters for the good.

PERHAPS many modern parents just won't give the time to their youngsters that all children need, but one thing I am sure about is that the child who is encouraged to develop a healthy hobby is less likely to go wrong. If that hobby is an interest in something living, particularly a dog, the odds will favor the youngster. In this I'm not theorizing. I've seen it work with children whether it took the form of stamp collecting, drawing, photography, raising chickens, keeping goldfish or being entrusted with the responsibility of caring for a dog or dogs. A hobby of some sort will help very much in the way of keeping small feet on the path of righteousness. In spite of the parental razor strop and some few buffets at school, no one ever worked harder to become a social outcast than your writer when he was young. But with advancing years as I grew up I had my nose pointed hobbywise, first being encouraged to breed show chickens (bantams they were—mainly chochins) and later to get into the more serious side of breeding dogs for the show bench. Later I was diverted into hoss-backing under the wing of a brother who was a steeplechase jock but the horses never seriously interested me, which was perhaps my loss. At any rate I escaped with a light sentence and in later years returned to my friends the dogs. But in those earlier times street corners and pool rooms saw me not. And the police never. It was my father's idea to get me to keep chickens since I lived where they could be kept. As that interest showed signs of waning my mother turned my attention to dogs, which with most youngsters is one of the easiest things to accomplish.

At first it didn't make any difference what kind of dog I brought home. But I was held strictly responsible for its care. I recall introducing one forlorn pup to my mother with the assurance that it would always be a small kind of dog. When that pup grew too big to get under the dining room table without seriously inconveniencing everyone who sat there, we knew he wasn't going to be a small dog. In fact he reached half the size of a Shetland pony. Maybe my memory is made misty by distance but it seems that it was so at the time. Now the hobbies I have mentioned may be—for reasons of living locations—prohibited for some children; or some parents may think them too expensive to warrant encouragement even though they might influence a youngster for the better.

Well I haven't statistics at hand to tell the total cost of today's juvenile delinquency nor statistics to reveal to what extent such delinquency has embittered the hearts and minds of parents of wayward children but the cost of encouraging healthy hobbies for children is far less, I'm sure. When it comes to dogs for children, I'm not writing in a sentimental vein such old-line stuff as it being a noble thing for little Harry or Harriet to have a dog for a pal to grow up with the youngster. On the contrary, the child who is given a dog should be taught to regard the dog as a playmate and not a plaything. By that I mean the youngster will be better off if held responsible for the welfare and care of the dog. As Raymond J. Hanfield, executive secretary of National Dog Welfare Guild, says "What could be a more beneficial and interesting pursuit than the raising and training of a dog? This is not sentimental but sound advice." In this, every professional writer about dogs I have known will agree with Mr. Hanfield, who further urges that parents get a dog for their children—either buy one or adopt one.

A dog can change the whole direction of thought, action and deeds, and help keep a youngster from boredom and lack of interests that so often lead into keeping bad company. Badly behaved, selfish children frequently, quickly change when given the faithful friendship and responsibility of caring for a dog. Children often grow with such responsibility. The dog will keep them busy, entertained and out of mischief. If the child's interest can be encouraged to the point where it will want to attend dog shows or get interested in breeding good dogs all the better. This increases juvenile responsibility and helps develop character. If the youngster is located where it is convenient to take him or her to dog shows there he or she will see other children competing in the show ring with their dogs or perhaps in obedience tests. For the parent sufficiently interested to encourage a child in this direction it isn't necessary to get a top-flight show dog to

IT WILL BE TIME, before you know it, to take off to the northwoods in search of a cool and breathable breeze. The innkeepers of Eastern Canada have been making a good thing, these many years, out of the dog days that are visited upon the territories to the south. By now there is a full array of lodges and upholstered shacks in which to seek a hideaway from the higher temperatures.

For one thing, should you be in Maine this summer, it is no distance or time to bust across the border into New Brunswick. Practically looking down the borderline itself is St. Andrew-by-the-Sea, which gives you a pretty good idea of its location right off. It is not very far from Eastport, Maine, and sits on a peninsula in Passamaquoddy Bay, should that be any help to anybody here present. The biggest thing about St. Andrews is the Canadian Pacific's Algonquin Hotel, a half-timbered, multi-gabled establishment that looks, perhaps, like an overgrown manor house. It has 230 rooms, and broad verandas, not to mention a private stretch of sand on Katy's Cove and no fewer than 27 holes of golf. There are four clay courts on the premises, and a casino for dancing and movies, and a fenced-in reservation for children of young Indian age.

Aside from the big Algonquin there are smaller places such as the Commodore Hotel on the main street and handy to the fishing fleet that ties up at the edge of town. It charges $8 a day per person for a room with private bath and meals included. Although it has a seaside and salty aspect, St. Andrews also offers good inland fishing, a few miles distant, for bass, salmon, and trout.

For a place that is different, you might look into Grand Manan, an island belonging to New Brunswick that sits at the entrance to the Bay of Fundy, is inhabited by 3,000 citizens, has no illiteracy, nor crime nor poverty, and makes its living on herring. Grand Manan is 17 miles long, seven miles across where it is broadest, and almost every one who lives on it has a car. On the sandbars there are clams, in the briny there are lobsters, if you have a secret passion for seagull eggs you can find them, friendly whales do everything but chase the herring into the smoke houses, and the local seaweed that embraces the pilings is edible (for those who are so inclined). All this is three and a half hours from St. Andrews. While it is not greatly developed for tourism you can ferret out places to stay like the Anchorage Hotel, but be prepared to breakfast on hard-boiled gull eggs which have a deep hue to the yolk and make pink cakes when mixed into the batter.

Another of the islands of Eastern Canada, but this one a full-fledged province, is Prince Edward Island, sitting off the east shore of northern New Brunswick. You can fly over it in no time or take your car across on the ferry and drive away. Prince Edward Island is loaded with potato fields, clover, bumper-sized strawberries, magnificent cattle, Malpeque oysters, soft-shelled clams, lobsters, great sand beaches—probably the best in Canada, and the warmest water north of Florida. The first week in June it will be about 65 degrees, and the average is somewhere around 69 degrees. The rather fashionable Dalvay House is located in the National Park, 200 yards from the sea, has 33 rooms, 10 baths and charges between $7 and $10 a day per person with meals. There are also cottages, tennis, lawn bowling and a driving range on the place. Adjoining the famous Green Gables golf course is Green Gables Bungalow Court, a settlement of 21 modern cottages a walk from Cavendish Beach. It is set up for light housekeeping and the tariff is $3.25 a day for each of two persons, and add $1 a day extra for children under 12.

One of the most popular places has always been Shaw's Hotel and Cottages, a small and friendly place with 30 rooms and six furnished cottages where the rates start at about $7 a day food included. It is located in Brackley Beach, 14 miles from Charlottetown. To get an idea of distance, Prince Edward Island is 877 miles from New York, 547 miles from Portland, Maine, and 1,303 miles from Detroit, all figured by car. The ferry charges $3 round trip for a car and 80-cents a passenger (about one sixth the cost of navigating one's way to and from Martha's Vineyard off the coast of Massachusetts).

The third of the three Maritimes is Nova Scotia, easily reached from the United States by Eastern Steamship Line steamer from Boston direct to Yarmouth. It is an overnight sailing and the good ships stow cars so that you can drive from the dock the next morning.

Of the lodges that wait in the woods, there is, for instance, the Lakeside Inn, a Canadian Pacific place not far from the dockside of the Boston-Yarmouth steamers. It has 68 rooms, all with bath, five cottages, 50 acres of property and, naturally, a lakeside location. Since the famed fishing village of Wedgeport is only 20 minutes away, the menu features seafood, and the sports program features fishing. And since quaint fishing villages also attract the artist, the nearby French shore, which is almost 40 miles of continuous village, is a great attraction for brush wielders.

Besides all that, you can swim in lower Milo Lake, play the 9-hole pitch and putt course, and sail a flotilla of 17-footers on the lake. No hay fever, either.

On the opposite side of Nova Scotia, facing on Northumberland Strait, not far from where the ferry departs for Prince Edward Island, is the delightful Pictou Lodge. It is a log cabin colony, a rough-hewn but comfortable resort by the edge of the salt water and yet also by the edge of the pines. It has a varied collection of four-, six- and ten-room cottages and all told can put up a hundred vacationers for the night. Fireplaces in the cabins and the dining room take the chill off things even in summer evenings. It is one of the few places where you can walk out of your pine-sheltered cabin and stretch out on a sand beach in about one minute and thirty seconds. Tennis on the premises and golf at the New Glasgow Golf Course a short haul away. Figure about $9 to $12 a day with food.

While you're in Nova Scotia bear in mind the famous Gaelic Mod at St. Ann's on Cape Breton Island which opens August 6th and runs for six days there. (Continued on page 42)

Here is a book every Elk should have

Here in the History of The Order of Elks is a volume that will be treasured by any Elk. You'll find it a fine gift to give to that candidate of yours because it is a complete history of the Order. It tells how the B. P. O. was established, it records the Order's accomplishments and tells why the Elks as a fraternal group continues to flourish and grow. It answers every question about Elkdom clearly, concisely. The offices of Elks Secretaries, libraries of Elks Lodges find it an invaluable reference source. As a historical document it would be a valued addition to the public library of your community. It is carefully documented and thoroughly authentic and thus is an important contribution to citizens and members of our Order who are interested to learn more about the B. P. O. E. # Ladies

HIGHLIGHT of a full program of events for ladies who attend the 1954 Grand Lodge Convention in Los Angeles, July 4-8, will be the California Fashion Cavalcade arranged by California Fashion Creators, whose 385 members have as their goal the further growth and expansion of the second largest fashion market in the world. The Convention Fashion shows are scheduled for Monday, July 5th, and there will be two showings—one at 10:00 p.m. and the second at 2:00 p.m. The shows will be held at the beautiful home of Los Angeles Lodge No. 99, host for the Convention.

Casual styles for informal pleasure in living will feature the California Fashion Cavalcade. In California, fashion ranks fifth in the state's manufacturing industries. California Fashion Creators in planning the show for ladies attending the Convention are making a special effort to demonstrate the reasons why style-minded California has gained its high position in the ladies' clothing field.

While the California Fashion Cavalcade is a feature of the 90th Convention, a comprehensive, outstanding program has been arranged under the direction of Past Grand Exalted Ruler L. A. Lewis and Robert S. Redington, President and Vice-President, respectively, of the Los Angeles Convention Committee. On Tuesday night, July 6th, at famed Hollywood Bowl the Cavalcade of Elkdom will be staged, with Nadine Conner of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Joseph Gandio as feature soloists. An Elk Chorus comprised of more than 100 voices, accompanied by a large symphony orchestra, will depict the history of the Order in music and story. The pageant will consist of more than 40 scenes or episodes portraying the Order's history and the cast will be about 500. The Committee expects this to be the greatest event of its kind that has ever taken place at a Grand Lodge Convention. There will be no charge for this entertainment not to be missed by any Elk attending the Convention and, furthermore, the Convention Committee has arranged for transportation to and from the Bowl.

The following day, July 7th, is marked by a program to acquaint Elks and their ladies with the reasons why Los Angeles has merited her reputation as a city for visitors. For instance, a Beach Day entertainment will be held in Santa Monica. There also will be Harbor Day events at Los Angeles and Long Beach Harbors. There will be tours of Hollywood, with stops at the homes of motion picture stars. For the sports minded, there will be horse racing at the famous Hollywood Park.

Although a full roundup of the Convention program appears on pages 20 and 21 of this issue, here are some brief points for pre-convention review: Opening Public Session will be held in the air-conditioned Paramount Theater on July 4th, where the four morning Business Sessions also will be held. An extensive program by the State delegations has been planned. Ritualistic teams will meet in the ballroom of the Alexandria Hotel for judging. Drill team contests will be held in Lafayette Park and there will be bleachers available for spectators. There also will be contests for choral groups and bands. In sum, an Elk event that most certainly will be a high-mark in the Order's long and important list of Grand Lodge gatherings.

WHEN YOU KNOW YOUR BEER ...it's bound to be Bud

How about you? If you're looking for the best way to cool off, treat yourself to cold, golden Budweiser. Other things may be as cold . . . but only Budweiser gives you that Budweiser taste, so refreshing and delicious that it leads the world in popularity.

"We extend our best wishes for a successful convention to you the men of the Elks and to your ladies."

OLD TIMERS IN ELKDOM

EVERY once in a while, we like to pay tribute to some of those Elks whose many years' devotion to the Order have been brought to our attention with a great deal of pride by their lodges—some with pictures, others with stories.

John Willenbrink, a Newport, Ky., Elk for over 40 years, served as its Tiler for over 26, and was recently made an Honorary Life Member. E. N. Musselman, 85-year-old Idaho Falls, Ida., Elk, has an Honorary Life Membership in the lodge he joined in 1909, after being affiliated with Ogden, Utah, Elkdom for six years. Initiated into Schenectady, N. Y., Lodge in 1920, 81-year-old P.E.R. Patrick J. Kirkwood edited its fine bulletin for 17 years, and last month, Frank J. McIntyre, a resident of Philadelphia, celebrated his 59th anniversary with Atlantic City, N. J., Lodge. Granville R. Lee, a Portland, Me., Elk since 1917, and an Honorary Life Member since 1946, is 98 years old, and Charles A. Winston, born in 1863, has been Springfield, Ohio, Tiler since his 1898 initiation.

Pottsville, Pa., Lodge's Frank J. Freiler was initiated 53 years ago. Later, business transferred him to Frackville where he organized an Elks lodge and was a Charter Member. In 1931 he rejoined Pottsville Lodge which he served as Treas. for a year, Tiler for five, and spent six years taking care of the House and Charity Committees' finances. Initiated into St. Charles, Mo., Lodge in 1914, J. Harry Dickbrader became a Charter Member of Washington, Mo., Lodge in 1929, received its first Honorary Life Membership in 1948. A P.E.R. and former Pres. of his State Assn., he is now 80 years old, and Waltham, Mass., Lodge's P.E.R. Timothy J. Sullivan, also a Charter Member, was 83 recently.

There are other veteran Elks we'd like to mention. One is St. Charles, Mo., Lodge's 79-year-old John Schulze who has just completed 44 years of continuous service as its Treasurer. Initiated in 1908, he was made an Honorary Life Member ten years ago.

During Col. G. J. Oden's 51-year membership he has "toured the world of Elkdom from West to East". Initiated into Sheridan, Wyo., Lodge in 1903, he sailed the Pacific in Army service and dimitted to Manila, P. I., Lodge in 1907. When he returned to this country via the Suez Canal in 1912, he transferred to Burlington, Vt., Lodge. Then, in 1936, when he retired from the Army, he dimitted to Los Angeles, Calif., Lodge of which he is a Life Member. Another long-time Elk living on the West Coast is 92-year-old Charles W. Weiside, active in Portland, Ore., Lodge since 1916.

Milwaukee, Wis., Elkdom has six candidates for this column—William F. Schad, 83-year-old P.E.R., was initiated in 1894. A Past State Pres., he has been an Honorary Life Member since 1901, and was Grand Est. Leading Knight in 1915. Two 1898 initiates are Life Member Henry Danischefsky and John L. Bohn, former Mayor, and three other Life Members are Robert W. Kiewert, born in 1878, initiated in 1900, a year before Peter Kunz and Otto Busse, both octogenarians.

NEWS OF THE LODGES CENTRAL EDITION

Hamilton, Ohio, Elks Busy

The members of Hamilton Lodge No. 93 were active participants in several important events during the past months. The first was the two-day conference of the S.W. Dist. which was held at their home, when 592 visitors saw the initiation of the 14-man District Class.

A few weeks later, the Hamilton officers initiated a group of 195 men as a tribute to A. J. Warndorf, their Senior P.E.R. Both events were conducted by the lodge's Secy., P.D.D. J. Earl Gray.

The Hamilton Elks are bowling enthusiasts, too; 130 of its keglers were in Toledo for the opening of the Annual Elks National Bowling Assn. Tourney.

Kingsport Tenn., Elks' Mortgage Goes Up in a Puff of Smoke

Not long ago, Kingsport Lodge No. 1833 was host to lodges of eastern Tenn. at impressive dedication and mortgage-burning ceremonies conducted by P.D.D. Maurice Conn., State Vice-Pres.

Following its organization in March, 1951, No. 1833 leased, with an option to purchase, a three-story building for its headquarters and a large piece of land,

This sizable group is Galena, Kans., Lodge's recent Grand Exalted Ruler James Class.

These are the Appleton, Wis., Elks who were feted on Old Timers Night recently.

The largest class in its history was initiated into Kendallville, Ind., Lodge not long ago by E.R. Wm. A. McCormick and his officers. Among those on hand were State Assn. Pres. L. A. Krebs, D.D. Earl L. Aders, Past State Pres. Roy J. Jorg and State Vice-Pres. Dr. W. A. Hart.

Below: This photograph was taken when Terre Haute, Ind., Lodge's E.R. Edward D. Mullis presented "Most Valuable Student Awards" to first-place winners David Sinnett and Marcia Kelley, and second-place students Billy Joe Bolk and Mary Kay Black. Also pictured are the lodge officers, some of the other 11 contestants, and the Grading Committee.

Above: Ernest J. DeSoto, Chairman of Louisville, Ky., Lodge's Scholarship Committee, arranged a luncheon for the winner and runner-up in the local Elks National Foundation Contest, and their parents. At the luncheon, E.R. J. H. Polsgrove presented a $100 U. S. Bond to Larry A. Raymond. The second-place winner, Rebecca Slover holds her $50 award.

on which a remunerative service station is also located. Last May the lodge voted to purchase this property and nine months later, the notes on it were paid off, and the papers destroyed.

Prior to these ceremonies, the State Championship Ritualistic Team from Bristol Lodge No. 232 conducted the initiation of a class. Among the witnesses were State Pres. S. J. Elkins, Jr., and P.D.D.'s B. L. Talley and J. J. Farrell.

New Orleans, La., Elks Krewe Marks 20th Anniversary

This year marked the 20th anniversary of the participation of New Orleans Lodge No. 30 in the famous pre-Lenten festival of that historic city.

Ever since the Elks Krewe of Orleansians was organized its traditional pageant dominates the daylight activities of the eve of Ash Wednesday. This year the Elk spectacle of over 100 magnificent floats followed the roving throne of Rex, King of Carnival, to the cheers of over half a million persons.

Each year, the Krewe selects boys from orphanages to act as its King and pages. The 1954 ruler was John Rodosta; Alcide Ballinger and Billy Holland, his pages. It was a big day in the life of these boys; garbed in costumes right out of a story-book, they led the Elks Krewe along the seven-mile route, appeared on television, received the keys to the city, and were guests at the banquet that evening when they received gold watches and saw awards made to outstanding parade units.

Sharing the spotlight was Mr. Elk, masked by No. 30's unique and traditional headpiece, a papier-mache replica of an elk's head. Despite its 3-foot height, this handsome affair weighs only 2½ pounds and may be worn comfortably for many hours. This year's Mr. Elk wore it for eight, without a murmur.

St. Joseph, Mich., Elks Aid Hospital

The citizens of St. Joseph had the opportunity to attend the community's first Minstrel Show in over 40 years recently. Put on by the members of the local Elks Lodge No. 541, it attracted a huge and enthusiastic crowd to the local high school and realized a net profit of $1,750.

Not long after the affair, Robert E. McMullen, who served as Treas. of the Minstrel Show, and retiring E.R. Paul L. McCrumb turned over a check in that amount to Rex von Krohn, Administrator of Memorial Hospital. The money will be used to purchase a highly specialized operating table for the bronchoscopy room at Memorial, and surplus funds will buy additional equipment according to the decisions of the hospital's Directors.

Two years ago, the Milwaukee, Wis., Elks' ladies presented a $100 Participating Membership in the Elks National Foundation. In May, 1953, they made an initial $100 payment on an Honorary Founders Certificate. Three months ago, on P.E.R.'s Night, the $900 balance, and $1,000 for a Permanent Benefactors Certificate, were turned over by Mrs. Gilbert O. Ash, on behalf of the ladies, to E.R. Ellis O. Bremer.

An unusual feature of Owensboro, Ky., Lodge's P.E.R.'s Night, celebrated with the initiation of a class by former E.R.'s, pictured above, was the fact that James T. Duncan, 1941-42 E.R., presided, with the remainder of the chairs filled by exactly the same men who had held each office during his term. Four of them are also P.D.D.'s—Earl S. Winter, Dan M. Griffith Jr., Charles H. Smith and Mr. Duncan.

Left: Over 225 persons attending South Bend, Ind., Lodge's annual Father-Son Dinner saw E.R. Werner C. Vernon, left, present to Miss Mary Lee Crofts and Robert Bubenzer the $350 scholarships, for any college in the United States, given yearly by the lodge. At right is John Adams High School Principal Russell Rothermel.

who filled the lodge room to capacity. The meeting, which followed a chicken dinner served by the Elks' ladies, was addressed by many Indiana Elk dignitaries, among them Pres. L. A. Krebs, Vice-Pres. W. A. Hart and Past Pres. Roy Jorg of the State Elks Assn., D.D. Earl L. Aders and P.D.D. Robert D. Bonnell. Mr. Krebs, the principal speaker, reported that the lodges of his State had given $350,000 to cancer research.

A. M. Milnar, Mayor of Kendallville, was another guest, and took the opportunity to present No. 1194 a certificate of appreciation for its splendid support of the March of Dimes Campaign.

Mobile, Ala., Elks Lead in Mardi Gras Events

Mobile Lodge No. 108 is a leading participant in the annual Mardi Gras festivities of the city. Each Saturday evening during the 1954 Carnival the lodge held a dance at its home, with open house every parade night. Its float was one of the most beautiful entries in the Floral Parade, and again in its second appearance on March 1st. That evening, the King and Queen of the Mardi Gras and their entourage were the guests of honor at the lodge's Annual Ball. The following day, No. 108 held its annual Juvenile Coronation with impressive ceremonies honoring the Mardi Gras rulers of the community's younger element.

It is during this Carnival that Mobile Lodge awards scholarships to students of parochial and public high schools, under the Chairmanship of G. M. Bailey.

Kendallville, Ind., Lodge Welcomes 61 New Members

On the last day of March, the roster of Kendallville Lodge No. 1194 was increased by the initiation of the largest class in its history. E.R. Wm. A. McCormick and his fellow officers brought the 61 initiates into the Order in an outstanding exemplification of the ritual witnessed by hundreds of local and visiting Elks akin to tossing around a telephone pole.

One other thought with which to leave you, out of one giant land which be-

Gaspé peninsula. The Gaspé, a neck of land in the French-speaking province of Quebec, is always likened to French Brit-its gnarled, wizened, Gallic characters, there is a resemblance to be sure. At any traveling in robust sedans which depart from Mont Joli, moving up through the quaint villages called Le Chat (The Cat), Cap au Renard (Cape of the Fox) to Madeleine, then on to Percé with its famous rock punched clear through with a hole, and its whale-shaped island topped with wild birds. The night is spent at the Peak of Dawn Hotel, high on a promontory looking down at the bay. The third night brings the party to the Hotel des Sables Rouges, then on to the beaches of the Baie des Chaleurs, with lunch at the Restigouche Hotel in the heart of the famous salmon streams. It amounts to 550 miles of driving and 95 dollars of cost, but that includes transportation, meals, hotel, a trip to see the bird sanctuary and the cool air of the summer evenings.

HOW YOUR CLUB CAN HELP THE NEGLECTED HARD-OF-HEARING

...this can be your MOST IMPORTANT project

One of the largest groups of handicapped persons are those who suffer from impaired hearing. Many, however, are denied the help that is available simply due to lack of money. Yet no great fund-raising drive or nation-wide program of help is devoted to their benefit.

More and more local service clubs and fraternal groups recognize this fact, and now are helping hard-of-hearing men, women and children of limited financial means.

This great humanitarian work includes sponsoring group hearing tests, providing funds for medical assistance, and furnishing hearing aids when needed.

Your club, too, can help fight the "neglected handicap." Upon request Zenith will send a suggested 7-point program to guide your club, and a portfolio of helpful folders and booklets.

We also will send full information about Zenith's remarkable tubeless, 3-transistor "Royal-T", the hearing aid that operates for only 15 cents a month! Zenith's superbly engineered instruments, built of the finest materials available, sell for only $125—remarkably low for 3-transistor hearing aids. (Bone conduction accessory at moderate extra cost.)

Your club's funds will go much further if you choose Zenith Hearing Aids for your rehabilitation project.

right angles as the lure is reeled in, causing it to wobble, splash and sputter.

Sometimes and in some areas one of these lures is better than another. The next day, a different one may be preferred. I don't know why bass react this way, either. As Bill Schaadt said, I haven't asked any of them lately.

Once in a while, even though the bass may be watching the surface, they won't take any of them. Then there is a dirty, underhanded, contemptible trick that usually puts meat in the skillet. I hate to tell about it, but if it is used only as a measure of last resort it would probably be all right.

One day I peered over the bank and saw a three-pound bass lying in clear water about two feet deep, beside a clump of weeds. I backed off thirty feet so that I could cast without scaring him and began trying to make him hit. I tried three or four top-water plugs, both large and small first, and I gave them every action I could think of. He swirled once behind a small plunker.

Next, I reeled a variety of under-water lures past his hangout. Nothing doing. I slipped back and peered into the water again to see if he had left, but he was still there. There's nothing I'd rather do than to outwit a fish that's hard to catch, so I went back to the job with doubled determination. The only trouble was, I was getting short of ideas.

My fly rod was in its case in the boat, so I set it up and tied on a bug and fished that over him. No soap. I tried two or three more bugs and fished them every way I could think of, and still he wouldn't strike. I tried a couple of bucktails. He refused them.

That stopped me. I peered through the brush once more to make sure he was still there and then I sat down to think it over. The only lure in which he'd shown any interest was the little plunker. He had swirled behind it, but he wouldn't strike. An idea came. Maybe the plunker attracted him. But maybe he was afraid of it. Perhaps if he saw something small darting along behind he would hit that. I quickly tied a bucktail to the tail hook of the plug with an 18-inch piece of nylon and made my cast.

That was it. Apparently he was watching the plug splashing its noisy way across the surface when he noticed the bucktail struggling along behind. So he said to himself, "Look at the half-witted minnow following that plug. I better eat him before Trueblood gets him."

As I said, he weighed three pounds. Since that experience, I've revived the jaded appetite of more than one good bass in the same way. They don't smash the bucktail like they do the plug, but it is sometimes worth a try.

While it seems to be necessary to have various types and sizes of top-water plugs, I never have been able to prove that their color made any difference. Yellow, green, black, red and white seem to be equally good. Very likely the fish see them only in silhouette against the sky and can't distinguish their color, anyway.

Surface plugs can be fished on either spinning or bait-casting tackle, but I prefer the latter. There are two reasons. First, it takes a fairly stiff rod to give many surface lures their best action. A soft rod lacks the backbone necessary to make them work properly. Second, the best fishing usually is found around weeds, brush, lily pads and other cover in the water. One frequently has to cast close to it in order to make the fish hit. A strong line, which works well on a level-winding reel but not on a spinning reel, enables an angler to jerk his lure loose when he gets hung. It saves a lot of valuable fishing time.

MY FIRST southern bass fishing was done with the same light, six-foot rod and fast level-winding reel that I had been using in the North. This outfit, with the nine-pound-test line I had on it, was comparable to spinning tackle. It cast beautifully and, in my blissful ignorance, I was inclined to look down my nose at the short, stiff rods, bigger reels and twenty-pound-test lines of the local anglers. I soon discovered, however, that they knew what they were doing.

When one of my casts went wild and lit in the weeds, I had to row over and disengage the hooks. This not only took time; it scared any bass in the vicinity. When the local boys snagged, however, their lines were strong enough so that they could jerk their plugs loose and go right on fishing. Long casts were never necessary, so whatever advantage my light outfit had in that respect was lost. In addition, they got more strikes because their stiff rods imparted better action to their darting and plunking lures.

There are two seasons when top-water fishing is at its best, although the exact dates depend on the weather, altitude, and latitude. The first is when the bass move into shallow water in the spring. They'll be there, getting ready to spawn, when the water temperature is between 65 and 70 degrees. Of course, there is the

Bass Fishermen will Say I'm Crazy... until they try my method!

But, after a 10 day trial, if you're at all like the few other men to whom I've told my secret, you'll guard it with your last breath.

Don't jump at conclusions. I'm not a manufacturer of any fancy new lure. I have no rods or lines to sell. I'm a lawyer and make a good living in my profession. But my all absorbing hobby is fishing. And, quite by accident, I've discovered how to go to waters that everyone else says are fished out and come in with a limit catch of the biggest bass you ever saw. The savage old bass that got so big, because they were "wise" to every ordinary way of fishing.

This METHOD is NOT spinning, trolling, casting, flyfishing, trot line fishing, set line fishing, hand line fishing, live bait fishing, jugging, netting, trapping or seining, and does not even faintly resemble any of these standard methods of fishing. No live bait or prepared bait is used. You can carry all of the equipment you need in one hand. The whole secret can be learned in twenty minutes—twenty minutes of fascinating reading. All the extra equipment you need, you can buy locally at a cost of less than a dollar. Yet with it, you can come in after an hour or two of the greatest excitement of your life, with a stringer full. Not one or two miserable 12 or 14 inch oversized keepers—but five or six real beauties with real poundage behind them. The kind that don't need a word of explanation of the professional skill of the man who caught them. Absolutely legal, too—in every state.

This amazing method was developed by a little group of professional fishermen. Though they are public guides, they never divulge their secret to their patrons. They use it only when fishing for their own tables. No man on your waters has ever seen it, ever heard of it, or ever used it. And when you have given it the first trial, you will be as close mouthed as a man who has suddenly discovered a gold mine. Because with this secret you can fish within a hundred feet of the best fishermen in the county and pull in ferocious big ones while he comes home empty handed. No special skill is required. The secret is just as deadly in the hands of a novice as in the hands of an old timer.

My secret will be disclosed only to a few men in each area—men who will give me their word of honor not to give the secret to anyone else.

Send me your name. Let me tell you how you can try out the secret method of bringing in big bass from your "fished out" waters. Let me tell you why I let you try my method for 10 days without risking a penny of your money on instructions or lures.

There is no charge for this information, now or at any other time. Just your name is all I need. But I guarantee that the information I send you will make you a complete skeptic—until once you try it. And then, your own catches will fill you with disbelief. Send your name, today. This will be fun.

matter of the local game law to be considered.

The other follows the heat of summer, when the shallows are becoming comfortably cool again. In the North, my best top-water fishing has been during the first week of June and again during the last week of September. In the South, I've had more sport in April and October.

Of course, you can catch bass on floating lures during the heat of summer, too. Sometimes they hit during the middle of the day, particularly if the sky is overcast, but more often late evening, night and early morning are better.

One morning I stopped my car beside a New York lake just as day was breaking. There was a faint streak of pink above the hills along the eastern skyline and vapors were rising from the water.

I tied on a small plunking type plug and cast it out into the semi-darkness of a little cove. I let it lie still for a minute, then took up the slack and raised my rod sharply. I heard the plug gurgle once. Then there was a sound like somebody had thrown in the parlor stove.

It was terrific. I felt as though 500 volts of electricity had come through the line. I jerked to set the hook—and I missed him!

I worked the plug on in and cast again and hooked a bass, a small one. I never did raise the big one again, but before the sun finally struck the water and they quit hitting I did catch eleven. They ran from ten to 13 inches long and, of course, I missed a lot of strikes.

And I'll say this: Eleven small bass on a surface plug are the equivalent of eleven big ones hooked on anything beneath the water. One big bass on a top-water plug is better than a dozen on sunken lures. I'm sure that every man who has caught them on top will agree.

hour bus jaunt. Their opponents, the Cincinnati Redlegs, will face the same prospect.

And what's so important about an exhibition game somewhere in central New York State in mid-August? Didn't the Yankees and Dodgers play nine times last Spring even before the regular season started? Well, chances are next year that some of those Yankees who got four straight hits against Dodger pitching in the Spring won't remember whether the game was played in Miami, Vero Beach or St. Pete. But no Yankee, or Redleg, for that matter, who will have played in this tiny hamlet in an exhibition game in August, 1954 will forget it.

As long as he lives he will be linked to it with a golden thread of memory. Always he'll be able to say, "I was one of the fellows who played at Cooperstown the day they put Terry, Rabbit Maranville, Dickey, Chief Bender, Barrow and those other guys in the Hall of Fame."

Chances are 1000-to-1 that the fellow doing the reminiscing will ever be elected himself to the gallery of the game's immortals. Only if he is a player of outstanding talents can he even begin to hope for so much as a handful of votes in the annual balloting starting five years after he has ceased being active. Yet in that brief moment of an August noon, as nine new bronze plaques are unveiled, he will be aware he is part of baseball's most solemn moment. And he'll never forget it.

Baseball's Hall of Fame is only one-fifth as old as the history of the pastime in this country. It was conceived as a promotional stunt to help celebrate the Centennial of Baseball in 1939. Less than two decades later it has now assumed the stature of a National shrine, a mecca to which people travel in always-increasing numbers each year, a pantheon in which the feats of 73 of the game's greatest figures are preserved for posterity, and a repository where the priceless memorabilia of the game is kept intact for future generations to gaze upon with that mingling of awe and exhilaration.

Yes, Baseball's Hall of Fame was a publicity stunt, all right. The man mainly responsible for the whole idea is the first to admit this. Ford C. Frick, now Commissioner of baseball, thought it up as a headline-grabber to help out the Centennial celebration.

Frick could easily be called the "spiritual father" of the Hall of Fame, just as Stephen C. Clark, wealthy Cooperstown industrialist and historian, could be described as its original "financial father." Clark's initial Hall of Fame role was that of paying out a fiver to purchase a beat-up old baseball found in a farm attic twenty-five years ago over in the adjoining hamlet of Fly Creek.

Would Clark buy the ball that was supposed to have been used by Abner Doubleday in the "first game of baseball ever played?" Clark, a local traditionalist of tremendous enthusiasm, responded with alacrity. Shortly thereafter the ball, together with a few other baseball souvenirs, was put on display in the Village Club.

Rightly or wrongly, Cooperstown, N.Y., had been established by official edict of a national investigating committee thirty years earlier as the "birthplace" of the game. Therefore, ever since the decision had been handed down shortly after the turn of the century, baseball enthusiasm had been high in the community. But anyone who would have suggested that only seventeen years after Stephen Clark had bought that tired old ball that more than 100,000 people would travel from the four corners of the country to this rural retreat would have been—well, simply locked up.

The first group of strange faces showed up in Cooperstown, June 12, 1939. One was that of James A. Farley, a former semi-pro first baseman from down in Haverstraw, N.Y., and at that time probably the most powerful political figure, outside of the President, in the United States. Farley, who played an important role in the political destiny of Franklin D. Roosevelt, was there in his official capacity as Postmaster General. His job was to help sell a few stamps—three-cent ones—on the first day of their issue. The stamp was the baseball commemorative, the occasion was the 100th anniversary of baseball, or at least the game's official version of the 100th anniversary.

ALSO PRESENT were the forbidding- visaged then-Commissioner of baseball, Judge K. M. Landis, Will Harridge, American League president, and the man who was ultimately to succeed Judge Landis as baseball's No. 1 executive, Ford Frick, then president of the National League. That there was all this fuss, ribbon-snipping and commotion caused by a celebration of a centenary which has a basis nowhere in documentation is a tribute to Frick's sense of news values.

An old newspaperman himself, once, with a lot of unusual interests like stamp collecting and the study of history, Frick has recalled how the Hall of Fame idea started.

"Soon after Mr. Clark got the old Doubleday baseball the idea of a Baseball Museum up in Cooperstown got rolling," recalled Frick. "Then they started plans for the 100th anniversary. A fellow up there asked me to help him arrange a radio broadcast of the celebration. I suggested a Hall of Fame for a really big publicity splash and that was it. The writers balloted four times before the Hall of Fame opened and when it did there were a dozen men ready to go in."

The Hall of Fame idea, then is incontrovertibly Frick's, but why a Hall of Fame in the first place?

"That's easy," he explained. "I was always interested in history and I used to visit the Hall of Fame up at University Heights a lot (the Hall of Fame for Great Americans on the New York University campus) so it was natural for me to think of a Hall of Fame for baseball players. Besides, I remember that when I was writing baseball every time some one did something extraordinary we wrote that 'so-and-so entered baseball's mythical Hall of Fame.' So we changed it from 'mythical' to something real."

The Hall for baseball players has ten fewer occupants than the one which had first stirred Frick's imagination. And for whatever it is worth as a sociological yardstick, the names of the occupants of Baseball's pantheon come quicker to mind for most people than the occupants of the parent Hall of Fame, except of course for a few names like Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, Grant and Lee.

It's tougher to get into the big Hall of Fame, though. You have to be dead at least 25 years to qualify. Ball players who were active between 1928 and 1948 are eligible for Cooperstown provided they've been retired from any field capacity (players, manager or coach) for at least five years.

For those who played or administered prior to 1928 there's a special Old Timer's Committee which meets every two years. Their next meeting is slated for 1955 and their scope is large enough to take care of such situations as Casey Stengel's not being eligible despite his five straight World Series championships because he is still active.

Well, you've played some time between '28 and '48 in the big leagues (although there's no rule keeping out a fellow whose entire career has been in the minors). You haven't been connected in any field capacity since 1949. Now what?

Next January, members of the Baseball Writers Association of America of ten or more years standing will vote for ten men. After that the mathematical formula decided upon back in 1936 when the whole thing got started, takes over. It is this.

For election, a candidate must get at least seventy-five per cent of the number of ballots cast. Last January when Maranville, Terry and Dickey made it, 189 votes were necessary among the 252 ballots. Maranville, who had died a couple of weeks earlier, led with 209; Dickey was next with 202 and Terry, whose personality differences with the older writers during his tenure as New York Giants manager had kept him out long past his rightful time, just squeaked by with 197. Joe DiMaggio missed with 175.

Next year DiMaggio will be an odds-on favorite to make it, along with Ted Lyons, the former White Sox pitcher and perhaps the old Brooklyn hurler, Dazzy Vance. If no one makes it, though, don't be too surprised. There have been other years when no one got enough votes for election.

The fellow with the greatest number of votes, proportionately, in any Hall of Fame election? That's easy. He is Ty Cobb, generally accepted as the greatest player ever to don a uniform. In '36's first election five men who had played after 1900 got enough votes. Of the 226 ballots cast 222 carried the name of Cobb. The impressiveness of this feat is best emphasized by the other men who made it on that occasion and their totals—Babe Ruth, 215; Honus Wagner, 215; Christy Mathewson, 205; and Walter Johnson, 189. You can draw whatever conclusion you will from the fact the first pitcher didn't appear until the No. 4 slot.

HALL OF FAME elections are always a nation-wide signal for a flood of correspondence to descend upon newspaper offices, magazines, and radio stations. Letters range from a hastily-scrawled "How could you forget Joe?—you blankety-blank" to a carefully composed and documented missive citing chapter and verse why Sam Whatsis is infinitely more deserving than the new incumbents.

"What is this?" is the demand, "a Hall of Fame election or a popularity contest? Since when are .290 hitters or pitchers who win 150 games the best that baseball has produced? What are you doing with your bribe money?"

Since these letters are usually directed toward newspapermen who haven't met the ten-year balloting requirement and radio commentators who aren't eligible to vote in the first place, there's only one thing to do. You throw the letters away or bundle 'em up and send them along to Ford Frick to add to the mess which overflows his desk at that particular time of the year.

"We get more mail about the Hall of Fame," admitted Frick, "than on any other topic. That is to say people outside baseball are more moved to write me about Hall of Fame matters than on anything else. We respect their sincerity and I'm the first to admit that there's room for change both in the qualifications of the candidates and the men doing the voting."

Commissioner Frick didn't say so but Hall of Fame balloting to a good many writers is pretty much like picking an All-America football team. You get your backfield and ends all lined up nicely, and maybe a center, and then you ask your neighbor at the next typewriter, "Know any good guards or tackles?"

There have been men voting, or receiving ballots for voting anyway, who haven't been around a ball park for ten years. Yet the rules declare "ten-year men are eligible to vote." In the last election the rule specifically stated that players were eligible only if they played between 1928 and 1948. Yet, Ross Youngs, former Giant outfielder who died in 1927, got 34 votes alone. Duffy Lewis, the former Boston outfielder now traveling secretary of the Milwaukee Braves, and who finished up in 1921, got twenty votes.

Errors in dates by a year or two might be understandable although a voter is not too heavily taxed with having to name ten men and could easily check. But how about the votes that were cast last January for Dizzy Dean and Al Simmons already elected the PREVIOUS YEAR? And how about the more than 100 votes given Chief Bender, the former Athletics pitcher, in blithe disregard of the fact that he had been voted into the Hall by the Old Timers Committee the previous September?

THE METHOD of balloting probably could, and should, be modified, but which way? Tighten it up and it works a hardship on those whose turn is still to come. Loosen it and it's unfair to those who have already gained their niche.

Supposing, as the suggestion has been made from time to time, that a no-hit pitching performance would become your card of admission to Cooperstown. Sounds reasonable? Well that would have put in a man who started with the St. Louis Browns last year, pitched his no-hitter, and then wound up in the minors where he had no takers for the $10,000 draft price, all in the same season.

How about the "perfect" game? There have been only a half-dozen hurled in the entire history of major-league ball and the last was by the White Sox's Charley Robertson thirty years ago.

Put Robertson in the Hall of Fame? That would group him with hurlers like Cy Young who won 511 games, like Hoss Radbourne, who won 60 in a single season, like Lefty Grove, like Ed Walsh, like Hubbell. Robertson, in his brief major league career, never won more games than he lost in any single season.

Dizzy Dean's election in 1953 caused a lot of distress among the purists, grammatical and otherwise, who wanted to know what right a fellow who was on top as a pitcher only a half-dozen years at most and who had won only 150 games had in the same company as moundsmen like Grover Alexander, Three-Finger Brown, Plank, and the rest. "What is this," they complain, "is it voting for great ball players or for fellows who can tell funny stories on the radio? How many votes you think Diz would have gotten if he hadn't been broadcasting the last few years and hadn't been in circulation all over both leagues?" Quite a few, I suspect.

THE RULES say that players . . . "shall be chosen on the basis of playing ability, integrity, sportsmanship, character, their contribution to the team on which they played, and to baseball in general."

Nothing is said as to the proportions in which these characteristics may be mixed. Nor is anything written on how far ability can overshadow defects in other departments. It's a fair assumption, though, that playing ability has been, and will continue to be, the No. 1 requisite. As a beleaguered manager once remarked when he was being advised on how swiftly one of his new men could go from first to second on a steal, "No one has figured out how to steal first base yet." Similarly, generosity, a mild manner, and a strong sense of fair play never showed up in a box score. Furthermore, it is debatable whether these qualities ever hastened a man's progress in a breakneck slide.

The fact that there was a baseball museum in Cooperstown even before the first group of baseball's immortals was installed in the Hall of Fame there comes as a surprise to most people. The Museum publicity hasn't matched that of the adjoining Hall of Fame. Vaguely they remember hearing something about Babe Ruth's stuff being on display, along with Cobb's accoutrements, and Stan Musial's shoes. A couple of seasons back there was a lot of publicity about Joe DiMaggio's No. 5 uniform being retired there after the Yankee Clipper finished up.

It comes as a pleasant shock, therefore, when a visitor, not intent on doing the place in a half-hour, comes upon the largest collection of baseball memorabilia in the world, plus the finest baseball library. The official name of the Cooperstown shrine is "The National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum," and to many people the Museum is the most fascinating place of all.

There have been only three curators in the history of the establishment. The latest, Sid Keener, a long-time baseball reporter and sports editor originally out of St. Louis, has followed the policy of his predecessors with regard to gifts offered to the Museum.

"We accept everything," advised Keener, "we buy nothing. We accept the owner's claim as to authenticity, and we give no guarantee that we'll have room to put it on display."

June 1950 cover of The Elks Magazine and right as it appears on a wall in the Hall of Fame, to which the original of the cover was presented by this magazine.

Keener sees his greatest number of visitors during July and August, the two big tourist months, but he's kept busy all year with his curator duties. If it isn't too far to travel he'll usually drive over to pick up some offered gift on the theory that it's the least baseball can do for someone who is parting with something infinitely precious to him. He has to decide what goes on display and what doesn't. He carries on a voluminous correspondence with people who want to know the answers to such questions as "When was the first double-header played?," "how long has it been four balls?," and "who created the term 'bull pen' and why?" And to keep him further occupied during the long winter evenings he has to do research on the material which will serve as the basis for the inscriptions on the Hall of Fame plaques.

This latter is a tough task. The earlier plaques said practically nothing. For instance, Babe Ruth's recites "Greatest drawing card in history of baseball. Holder of many home run and other batting records. Gathered 714 home runs in addition to fifteen in World Series." And that's all.

The newer ones give the writer-historian double that latitude but it's difficult to encompass a distinguished career in 320 units of letters and spaces. And there's always someone to ask later, "How come you left out the time he hit those three homers in one game?"

Keener maintains that current publicity always has a lot to do with what the public looks for among the exhibits. Last year the bat that Mickey Mantle used to hit a ball an estimated 579 feet in Washington and the ball itself was the focal point of heavy interest. And when anything new, like DiMaggio's uniform, or Cobb's sliding pads, are first put on display, they draw heavily.

"A good many people wonder what Cobb's sliding pads are. They're made of sheepskin and you don't see too many around today because hardly any players wear pads now. That's because they don't slide," said Keener.

"Cobb stole 96 bases one year. Do you know that the entire St. Louis ball club stole a total of 18 bases in 1953? And Cobb stole more in one year than the entire Brooklyn club stole last year. No wonder he needed sliding pads."

To see the Cobbian pads, the Ruthian crown, Stan Musial's shoes and silver bat, and the 73 plaques honoring the game's immortals there is a reasonable charge because the people behind the Hall of Fame feel that only if the shrine is self-supporting is there any guarantee of its being perpetuated after the present group of officers passes on.

Kids under six get in for nothing, there is a 15c charge up to 18 years and after that it's 75c. It's never come up but there'd be no charge for any living Hall of Famer (there are 30 alive) if he wanted to come through. Keener hasn't seen any since he took over.

"We sell tickets just like at a ball park," he explained. "Everything is mechanical. Just press a button and as many as you want shoot out to the customer. It's probably the only museum in the world that sells tickets this way."

Cooperstown's founding fathers hardly ever thought their village would ever have a parking problem but it becomes a little congested on a big summer afternoon when there is a heavy influx of visitors. Cars bearing plates from the 48 states park all over the place, up and down Main Street, on Pioneer and on Fair.

The great majority of the Cooperstown visitors drive. Rail is a tough way to make it. By air the connecting bus ride would be even longer. A long time ago passenger rail service into Cooperstown was halted (there's weekly freight service) and the nearest railroad stop would be Fort Plain to the East on the main New York Central line.

Mohawk Airlines, an intra-state DC-3 operation, runs into both Binghamton to the South and Utica to the North. Most people have found it easiest to come into New York and then drive up through the Catskills direct to Cooperstown, a five-hour haul.

Actually, to an outsider not familiar with the grip baseball has on so many people, it would seem a little incredible that so many make this off-beat trek. After looking at a dozen plaques don't they all begin to look pretty much alike? And old uniforms somehow always look like something out of a rummage sale, even though they're sent out to be cleaned yearly.

A BAT is a bat and a ball is a ball, yet these same impedimenta represent something different in Cooperstown. To the youngster they represent a pinnacle, towering at a dizzy height, but attainable. To his older companion they represent something else . . . the recapturing of a brief golden moment when the world was a toy, or better still, when it was a scuffed or tape-covered ball to be swung at mightily and perchance to be knocked over the fence. And in those days, young man, if you broke a window there was no national publicity campaign standing behind you to make good on the cost of replacing it. You grabbed your cap, the fastest man grabbed the precious bat, and everyone ran.

You didn't know it at the time but with every step you took you were running away forever from something to which you could never return. You couldn't go back because there were other kids, younger than you, crowding behind, already getting their first feel of bat, ball and glove and experiencing the thrill of a thrown ball, a stinging catch, or a mad dash to a base, even as you had.

There's a priceless recording in Coop-

Ruth's No. 3 uniform was to be retired that day and was destined for Cooperstown. It hung on his wasted frame that afternoon. Dying of throat cancer, Ruth had only a few months to live. It was to be his last appearance alive in Yankee Stadium, the edifice which he had contributed so much to building.

When it came time for him to speak he looked at the crowd of 50,000, the members of the Cleveland Indians and the Yankees, the two leading teams in the American League that season, and said huskily. . . .

The Future Looks Good

jump from the 1953 population of 160 million.

To the businessman, this unprecedented growth translates itself into potential new customers. In an economy such as that of India and China, more people may mean only more poverty, but ours is a dynamic economy. Our vast productive plant has become geared to meeting the demands of a people accustomed to the highest living standards in the world. The addition of 40 million more people within a 21-year period opens a rich market for more automobiles, more homes, more electrical appliances—more, in short, of everything.

Every industry will feel the impact of that demand.

Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board, United States Steel Corporation, for example, has stated that the steel industry must erect a new Fairless Works (the largest steel plant ever built at one time) every 17 months for the next 20 years if it is merely to keep the per capita consumption of steel at present levels. And it took the United States Steel Corporation 30 months to build the Fairless Works!

The electrical utilities industry has consistently doubled its capacity and output each decade for the past 75 years. To match the growth of our economy, that industry may have to step up even this phenomenal expansion rate in coming years.

Does this sound like recession? The contrary is true. The need today is for greater production, more factories, and more jobs.

Businessmen are paying far more attention to the population growth charts than to the shortsighted forecasts of the gloom merchants. The emphasis for the long pull is definitely on expansion.

General Motors has announced a billion dollar program for the purchase of additional equipment and erection of new plants. General Electric has expressed its confidence in the future with an equal investment. Nor have the announced expansion programs been confined to the larger firms. Across the length and breadth of the nation, industry is investing an estimated $27.2 billions this year in expanding its productive capacity.

Industrialists must give a periodic hard cash account of their stewardship to stockholders. They cannot afford to spend sums in the amount of $27.2 billions year after year, as they have been doing, on vague enthusiasms. Every dollar expended for expansion by every firm, large or small, must be based upon a thoroughly analyzed research study of sales potential.

One of the factors which go into the making of a pessimist is a strongly held conviction that our economy has become saturated without hope of further sales potential. Such reasoning generally stems from a belief that an economy, like the human being, becomes "mature" and hence incapable of further growth.

The theory of the "mature economy" has produced a horde of wrong-guessers at every stage in our history. In 1904 some leading financiers warned that the automobile industry was facing a serious case of over-production by turning out 23,000 vehicles. By 1908, when the industry had stepped up its annual production to 65,000, a prominent investment house refused to finance the merger of two reliable car companies because they thought the market had been hopelessly saturated.

That's why there's a Hall of Fame, and that's why 150,000 people will go out of their way to visit it this year.

But the industry continued on its way, expanding and "over-producing". And the public continued to buy automobiles. In a single month of 1953, the industry turned out and sold more than ten times as many automobiles as it had in the entire "saturated" market of 1908.

Does the warning of a "saturated" automobile market sound familiar to the readers of today's newspapers?

As spectacular as has been our nation's population growth, the rise in living standards has been even more rapid. Measured by the increase of total production over the past years, the demands for our people have been truly insatiable.

In 1929, the nation's industrial and business plants turned out some $172.5 billions in goods and services as measured in 1952 dollars. By 1952, the gross national product had jumped to $348 bil-

Enroute to Brazil By Air

Past Grand Exalted Ruler Edward J. McCormick of Toledo, Ohio, President of the American Medical Association, and Dr. David Allman, Atlantic City, N. J., Lodge, member of the AMA Board of Trustees, addressed the International College of Surgeons meeting in Sao Paulo, Brazil, in April. They were accompanied by Mrs. McCormick and Mrs. Allman. The party returned via Lima, Peru, where Brothers McCormick and Allman spoke at a medical convention, with a stop-over at San Juan, P. R. Boarding the plane at Idlewild Airport left to right are Dr. Allman, Mrs. Allman, Mrs. McCormick and Dr. McCormick.

lion. At that rate of growth, again using the 1952 dollar as our measuring stick, we can expect a total output of some $700 billions by 1975.

A gross national product of $700 billions means that for every mechanism manufactured today, there will be the equivalent of two available within the next 21 years. For every electrical appliance in today's kitchen, two will then be on the store counter. Even with more people to clothe, house, and feed, our economy will be geared to satisfy the demands for a still higher standard of living than our nation enjoys today.

It is to supply the greater demands of tomorrow's $700 billion economy that industry has been investing today's expansion program dollar. Each new plant created by each investment dollar has a specific consumer target at which the resultant product will be aimed. There is very little, if any, element of chance in the analysis of sales potential.

Marketing research, for example, points to a tremendous demand in the air-conditioning field. With air-conditioning sales already past the annual $1 billion mark, the task of filling that demand has scarcely begun. Companies specializing in air-conditioning are preparing productive capacities for a $5 billions market within the next ten years.

In 1952 some 15,000 air-conditioned homes were constructed. Last year sales in this market more than tripled. By 1958 it is expected that half of all the new homes constructed in this country will be completely air-conditioned with central system equipment. Within a decade such systems should become as standard a feature as central heating is today. And there are 25 million homes today with central heating systems!

A similar pattern of unfilled needs and sales planning can be related for other industries. The chemical industry expects to double its output by 1961 with something like half of all synthetic organic chemicals being made from oil or natural gas. The U. S. Rubber Company is predicating its expansion plans on a 30 per cent increase in rubber consumption within a ten-year period.

The demand for existing products cannot alone account for the past growth of our nation's productive capacity. America's present standards are also due to the ability displayed by business in creating new products which further stimulate consumer appetites.

The chemical industry's phenomenal growth has resulted largely from new products known only to the research technician twenty five years ago. Television was still a curiosity when World War II ended. Today more than 25 million sets have been sold and in cities such as Boston and Chicago there are already more television sets in use than there are home telephones or bathtubs.

For all the gloom merchant's talk of "over-production", industry is continuing to pour billions of dollars each year into research. The rate of new products being introduced on the commercial market is steadily increasing. Every ten minutes somebody is thinking up a new product or improvement for which a patent is issued. By 1975 there will be vast industries turning out new products, now on the drawing boards or in test tubes, which will be as strange and wonderful to tomorrow's shopper as television was to the pre-World War II consumer.

In fact, throughout history, we have tended to be too conservative in our appraisal of the future. When we read the predictions of authors made a century ago, we generally find that the "gadgets" dismissed by their contemporaries as wild flights of fancy are today's commonplace equipment. But the most exciting new product or the outpouring of vast quantities of established goods can mean relatively little unless there is money burning to be spent in the consumer's purse.

Here again an examination of past trends demonstrates that per capita earnings have continued to grow, more than keeping pace with the nation's productivity increase. In 1929, real income per capita (as measured in 1952 dollars) amounted to $1,120. By 1952 the per capita income had risen to $1,860. Projecting these trends to 1975, economists for the National Association of Manufacturers have estimated that per capita earnings may reach $3,200.

STILL ANOTHER question mark in seeking to gauge the extent of our economy's future growth must rest in the availability of jobs. Our population growth is adding a million new workers each year to our total labor force. By 1975 we will have a working force of 88.6 million as compared to the 66 million of 1952.

Will there be enough jobs in 1975?

On an average, it takes an investment of $12,000 in plant facilities, equipment, and other assets to create a single new job. If industry then is to provide enough new jobs for a 1975 labor force of 88.6 million, it must invest $265 billion in plant expansion.

These needed billions will not be forthcoming unless we can more firmly establish a tax system that will permit a greater flow of corporate and individual income into necessary business expansion. In addition to the damage that the pessimist does by instilling fear in the consumer, he equally jeopardizes our prospects for future prosperity when he stimulates a demand for futile pump-priming gestures through resort to greater government taxing and spending.

No government can spend a nation out of a depression. Wherever government has become increasingly involved in a country's economy, that country has inevitably proceeded from crisis to crisis without a solution for the problems which initially touched off the march to Statism.

The success of our nation's economy has been primarily due to the freedom afforded each and every individual to seek those material gains made possible by his own talents and efforts. We have become a nation of 160 million people, each in his own way trying to make a better home and a better life for himself and his family.

In the process each of us has earned more real wages. We have turned out more products, purchased more goods and services than have our predecessors. Collectively our nation has grown from a pioneer's wilderness into a powerful world colossus. Furthermore, in spite of our collective power and our individual self-interests, we have afforded our citizens a greater and greater measure of personal liberty.

It has been popular over the span of our national existence for some politicians to gain public notice by decrying "big business". They have warned, repeatedly that "big business" was fast

Mississippi country on horseback. The fact that these explorers rode stallions almost exclusively is evidence enough that the mustangs,* as legend has it, did not originate from animals lost on the expeditions. There is other evidence if it were required.

In settling outposts, the Spaniards often lost horses—of both sexes. There were no fences, and horses belonging to settlers strayed off. The Spaniards traded some horses to the Indians. The Indians stole far more. They stole also from each other. Horses became their primary form of property, and, like other owners on the open range, they lost horses. The lost and the strayed bred, and by the close of the 18th Century, bands of the feral increase were grazing from the Columbia River basin in the far Northwest to Sabine Pass, which separates Texas from Louisiana against the Gulf of Mexico.

They were never anything like so numerous as the buffaloes, or deer and antelopes, but in beauty, vitality and appeal to human imagination, they dominated all other forms of wild life. Although they took to very rough country and learned to hide themselves in brush and woods, they were by nature prairie animals, depending on sight, smell and speed for security. Their greatest concentration was in southwestern Texas, between San Antonio and the Rio Grande and then eastward along the coastal plains.

When General Taylor's army broke camp at the mouth of the Nueces River on the Texas coast in March, 1846, to begin the Mexican War, Lieutenant U. S. Grant was in the command. He rode a closing opportunities to present and future generations.

Yet small business firms have continued to multiply and prosper. Many of the so-called "big business" organizations in the recent past have withered and newcomers, started by the very generations for whom the politicians wept, have become the successful corporations of today.

The gloom merchant is preaching today that productive facilities are so over-expanded, business opportunity is no longer available. However, by 1975 another 850,000 business firms will have been founded and will be operating.

America's material rewards have traditionally gone to the visionary, the man who based his work and plans on the greater tomorrow. The railroad executive who pushed his rail line into empty plains and forests soon saw towns and factories mushrooming along the tracks, turning his "daydreams" into profitable invest-freshly captured mustang that had cost $3.00.

"A few days out from Corpus Christi," he wrote long afterwards in his Memoirs, "the immense herd of wild horses that ranged at that time between the Nueces and the Rio Grande was seen directly in advance of the head of the column and but a few miles off. It was the very band from which the horse I was riding had been captured but a few weeks before. The column halted for a rest, and a number of officers, myself among them, rode out two or three miles to the right to see the extent of the herd. The country was a rolling prairie, and, from the higher ground, the vision was obstructed only by the earth's curvature. As far as the eye could reach to our right, the herd extended. To the left, it extended equally. There was no estimating the animals in it; I have no idea that they could all have been corralled in the State of Rhode Island, or Delaware, at one time. If they had been, they would have been so thick that the pasturage would have given out the first day. People who saw the Southern herd of buffalo, fifteen or twenty years ago, can appreciate the size of the Texas band of wild horses in 1846."

In October of that year another traveler over the prairies between Corpus Christi and the Rio Grande estimated one aggregation of mustangs at 5,000 head, though his companions put the number at 7,000. "On our approach," ment. The same America of opportunity awaits today's youngster.

Even though our economy has proved to be a dynamic one, its past course has never been one of steady climb. There have always been peaks and valleys, moments of pause and then a resumption of the upward surge.

The termination of war and resumption of peace—however uneasy a peace—have usually brought a momentary slackening as industry underwent a period of adjustment.

We are now undergoing such a period. While businessmen must be alert to current market conditions, they must also maintain a longer range perspective. For myself, viewing the long range potentials beyond this temporary valley, I have no hesitancy in saying our nation's economic future looks good to me. I have no fears for what may lie ahead for our children or even our children's children.

he recorded, "the stragglers and sentinels on flanks and outposts retreated to the main body, which, almost as if by magic formed on a high piece of ground, with all the precision and regularity of a well-trained troop of cavalry. Each band was headed by its own leader." Between itself and the bands on the right and on the left of it, each "preserved an open space about equal to that occupied. This was, in Mexican phrase, their 'wheeling distance.' When we approached within four hundred yards, the signal of 'Bout face' and off was given. . . . For three miles they were in full view, tossing their proud necks and flowing manes into the air and coursing with the speed of the wind."

In 1847, Thomas A. Dwyer, weary of practicing law in London and Dublin but still delighting in Horace and Byron, established a horse ranch on the lower Nueces River. He bought native mares on the Rio Grande and crossed them with blooded jacks and stallions. Setting down some of his recollections a quarter of a century later, he said:

"I well remember when I first came to Texas seeing thousands and tens of thousands of wild horses running in immense herds all over the western country, as far as the eye or telescope could sweep the horizon. The whole country seemed to be running! While traveling through it, I have had my gentle pack mules cut off by mustangs circling and circling around us and gradually closing in until, by a rush, they darted away with them. . . .

"Time and again I have had to send out my best mounted men to scare away the immense masses of mustangs (charging around and threatening to rush over us), by yelling and firing at them. Then the mustangs would wheel and go thundering away as Byron grandly describes the hundred thousand wild Ukraine horses in Mazepa... The supplies of wild cattle and horses then seemed so abundant as to be inexhaustible."

In December, 1852, John R. Bartlett, Commissioner on the United States and Mexican Boundary Survey, was proceeding with a wagon train from the Rio Grande to Corpus Christi. As he gazed one day across the trackless grass, "the prairie near the horizon seemed to be moving, with long undulations, like the waves of the ocean." A telescope revealed "the whole prairie towards the horizon alive with mustangs." Before long they were nearing the wagons, the herd "extending as far as the eye could reach." The great stream of wild runners stampeded some of the mules. The wagons had to be placed in corral formation and the wheels locked; the men even thought it necessary to fire at the "avalanche of wild animals sweeping like a tornado" in order to deflect it.

THE COLUMBIA RIVER basin held many wild horses. About 1816, in the region dominated by the Nez Percé Indians, Ross Cox estimated "from seven hundred to a thousand" in one band. Some of his fellow-explorers reported bands of from 3,000 to 4,000 head in the Snake Indian country; one of 200 head verified by Cox sounds more realistic. They were more numerous along the Arkansas River; large numbers ranged on other areas of the plains and up from the coastal prairies of eastern Texas; but nowhere else in North America were there the multitudes that gave their name to Mustang Desert between the drainages of the Nueces and the Rio Grande.

The coming together of many bands was only occasional. Perhaps fright, by man, wolf or panther, converged the runners oftener than any other cause. As late as 1881, in a great brush-rimmed prairie between the Nueces and Frio rivers, John Young sat on his horse and watched "fully a thousand mustangs" running together from many directions ahead of a big roundup of cattle. "When they left the plain where they had gathered, they all left at once in one direction. The rumble from their running was deafening and they fairly shook the earth. A stampede of five times as many cattle could not have caused such disturbance."

Sheer animation, contagious curiosity, some special urge of the herd instinct, and other factors no doubt drew running bands together. Whether the bands maintained their identity during a run or disintegrated in mass flight, after a run was over, they separated for normal pastoral life. Every stallion commander knew his own, and each could be seen cutting out of the general herd what belonged to him.

The normal mustang unit was a varying number of mares, with their young, under the command of a stallion. In the Southwest this unit was—and is—called manada. The term is more precise than band, for band means any number of any kind of horses. On horse ranches in "the Spanish country"—notably in California and Texas—before barbed wire enclosed pastures, a domesticated stallion was put with about twenty-five mares, and then a vaquero, or cowboy, herded them for several days, penning them at night, until the unit was well cohered. After that it was turned out on the open range. The stallion could be depended upon to keep his manada together.

The mustang stallion was both polygamous and constant. Guarding his mares the year round against all enemies and keeping them for himself against all other stallions made him fiercely possessive and domineering. When colts were a year or so old, he generally cut them out of his manada, males and females alike. Thus, inbreeding was the exception rather than the rule.

Only at foaling time did the mares drop out to be alone, often for hardly a day, until their colts grew strong enough to run. The identity of the manada endured as long as the vigor of its master endured. Depending upon his vigor and aggressiveness, it might number anywhere from three to fifty. Perhaps, as old tales tell, a rare master-stallion now and then assembled a hundred or more mares. A band of thirty was considered extra large; one of from fifteen to twenty was usual, but bands of a half dozen or so were common. The number fluctuated, for the stallions were constant contenders with each other for mares, the old giving way to the young, the young dividing up their inheritance, not because they wanted to but because they were powerless to maintain monopolies.

Since colts are born about equally male and female, many stallions could have no harems, not even a single mare. The outcasts kept company with each other to an extent but formed no cohesive unit. They came together like buck deer when they are not bucking, in twos, threes, and other small numbers, though as many as seventy-five in a bunch were reported. Pursuit of a group would scatter them, whereas a manada ran as a unit to either freedom or captivity. The mareless stallions were of three classes: the immature, the declining, and the mediocre who had never tasted and would never taste power.

VIRTUALLY all stallions were wanting mares. Even the impotent, wanted them for company. Few stallions with mares had so many that they did not desire more. Every herd-stallion had to combat constantly against other leaders as well as against the outcasts.

Immediately before an engagement, the stallions, tails straight out or raised to an angle of about forty-five degrees, would prance, rush back and forth, nicker and whistle with a shrillness that could be heard a mile away. The combatants met each other walking on hind legs, striking with forefeet, ears laid back, mouths open, teeth bared. They raked the hide from each other, made deep cuts. They screamed. Their teeth slipping off firm flesh clicked together. They sought jugular veins. They lunged their whole weight against each other. Now one or both whirled with catlike rapidity and kicked like a pile-driver. A pair of flying heels hitting against another pair of flying heels cracked like a whipsnap of lightning. Those heels could crash a hock or cave in a rib. Unless the weaker ran—and he often chose the better part of valor—he went to the ground, there to be pounded with iron-hard clubs and lacerated between steel-strong, ivory-spiked jaws.

AFTER going to the ground, a stallion was lucky if he could regain his feet and run. The victor might follow a runaway for a mile, tearing at him with every jump. If the runaway had mares, some might escape with him, but the conqueror was likely to take some. Sometimes the fighters were evenly matched. Cheyenne warriors once rode up on two stallions, each the dominator of a band of mares, too exhausted from long fighting to run away. Great strips had been jerked from their hides, and the nostrils of one had been torn off.

Like all wild creatures, wild horses feared man above other enemies and wanted to get away from him. Now and then, however, some lord of a mare-harem, instead of running from an approaching rider, would trot out a short distance to meet him, stand with head held high, and look steadily until assurance of danger made him waver. Then with a mighty snort he would wheel and, squealing and biting, set the mares off on a run. Bolder stallions would run only so far before turning on the chasers. A heavy black stallion with only the stubs of his ears remaining that ranged long ago on the Republican River of Kansas would invariably turn on Cheyenne riders when they neared his band. No mounted horse could be forced against him. He and his always got away. Another stallion, a strawberry roan, chased by the Cheyennes acted in a similar way. Any horse so brave must have "strong spiritual power," and killing him would bring "bad fortune to the killer."

If roped, a fighter stallion was likely to turn on his captor with a ferocity that only a bullet could quell. Frank Collinson, one of the most powerful men I have ever met, came in young vigor from England to Texas soon after the close of the Civil War and ranged as far west as grass grew. In the fall of 1874, he went to a camp of buffalo hunters on Double Mountain Fork of the Brazos River and, while waiting for troops to clear the Comanches off the range, threw in with a hide hunter named Louis Keys. Both had worked as cowboys and both rode the best of cow horses.

Mustangs were comparatively scarce in that part of the country, but along Deep Point Creek, a magnificent-looking red-sorrel stallion guarded his band of mares. The buffalo hunters had no use for mares but wanted the stallion. Deep Point Creek has steep banks, lined by elm trees and other growth. If the mustangs were on the south side of the creek and took alarm, they ran to an old buffalo crossing and crossed to the north side. If anything disturbed them on the north side, they ran to another crossing and got on the south side.

Frank Collinson and Louis Keys decided that the first time they located these mustangs south of the creek, one would haze them across while the other waited on the north bank to rope the stallion when he came up. He would give a tremendous jerk when he hit the end of the rope; as Collinson rode the heavier horse, he was to do the roping. After Keys got the mustangs headed for the crossing, he was to fire his Winchester as a signal. Their chance to capture the stallion came as they had planned.

"Soon after I took my stand, beside the topping-out place on the trail," Frank Collinson said, "I heard the shot. Next I heard the plunging hoofs. The animals were running as hard as they could run. The first one up the trail was a big mare who always led the runs. The sorrel stallion was behind. I could not see him, but Keys later told me that he paused for a minute on the south rim to take a look at his enemy only a few hundred yards behind. He plunged up the bank like a big buck, in long jumps. Just as his head was clear, I shot my loop. I couldn't have made a neater catch.

"I thought he would run to the end of the rope, but before he tightened it he headed straight for me, ready to grab. He came pawing and caught my right thigh down towards the knee between his teeth. They peeled off pants, skin and a layer of flesh, and when they hit together they sounded like a sprung steel trap.

"I grabbed my sixshooter, and before he could charge a second time, shot. The flash of the discharge right in his face must have scared him. He wheeled. I had missed his head. While he was turning, I shot again and hit him near the root of the tail. He lunged to the end of the rope with all his might and jerked my horse down. I fell clear, but here he came again full speed, ears back and mouth open. His eyes were literally blazing. Just at this time, Keys topped out. He jumped off his horse, Winchester in hand, and shot. He hit the stallion in the shoulder, breaking it. That stopped him. The next shot hit him square in the head. He fell within a few feet of me. The rope about his neck was still tied to my saddle horn. I could hardly have reached the bluff for a jump. If Keys had not come up at the right instant, the stallion would almost certainly have killed me."

In fiction the proud stallion always "troops it at the head of his band." Sometimes the stallion did lead the runners. Generally he drove them, some mature, wise mare leading, taking his signals. He was rear-guard defender as well as general. He punished laggards unmercifully, forcing mothers to leave behind colts unable to stand the pace, on occasion killing them so they would not impede the manada's flight and cohesion. He raced up and down the sides of his manada, ramming into the ribs of one mare with his hard crest, kicking this one, raking that one with his teeth, grabbing into the haunch of another. There were stallions also who would break away from mares hard-pressed by the enemy man and depend for escape on solitary flight.

How good these wild horses were for use when captured cannot be unqualifiedly asserted. The original Spanish horses were strong in Arabian blood. If they were more Barb than Arabian, the fact remains that Barbs were derived from Arabians. In moist country to the southeast the wild horses tended to be more runty than in high dry country. In their epochal expedition into the Northwest around 1805, Lewis and Clark found many Indian horses, which were in effect mustangs, as good as "our best blooded horses in Virginia." Contrary to popular idea, there were few paints among them. Blacks, browns, bays, sorrels, whites, grullos (slate-colored) and duns were common.

Whatever their size or color, they were as competent at rustling a living as burros and were as tough as rawhide. When a band was chased on the prairie, the best individuals usually escaped. Along in the forties and fifties, mustangers took to relaying each other in "walking" a band down, dogging it for days until from sore feet, lack of sleep and sheer exhaustion it could be directed into a pen. There the top animals were roped and the dregs were turned out to breed. This meant a decline in type.

AFTER the West was fenced in, many mustangs were shot out of existence. They ate valuable grass and spoiled domestic horses. Others were bred out of existence, just as nearly all longhorn cattle have been "bred up" until few of the original type remain.

However superior or however inferior, the mustang was at his or her best only in freedom. Halted in animated expectancy or running in abandoned freedom, the mustang was the most beautiful, the most spirited and the most inspiring creature ever to print foot on the grasses of America. When he stood trembling with fear before his captor, bruised from falls by the restrictive rope, made submissive by choking, clogs, cuts and starvation, he had lost what made him so beautiful and free. Illusion and reality had alike been destroyed. Only the spirited are beautiful.

start with. Any pure-bred dog conforming to the standard of its breed will serve the purpose.

The winning of a ribbon, any kind of a ribbon is a genuine thrill for the small fry. At some of the smaller shows it is quite possible to get a third, a second or even a first prize with a dog of average quality and such a dog, unless it is one of the larger breeds, can be purchased at a fair and by no means excessive price. Reputable kennels like to encourage children to take an interest in breeding or showing dogs. It's to the advantage of the far-sighted kennel owner because this helps extend his market for good dogs. You may have seen the light in a youngster's eyes—and I hope you have—when it has been given a new bicycle or equally expensive toy, but brother you haven't seen anything until you see the light in those same eyes when that boy or girl wins its first show ribbon and, need I add, with that child there's no dog in all the world half so good as the one that has been awarded the ribbon. Yes, for long after, that dog is an extra special kind of dog. And you can be sure it will be given extra special care by its owner.

If you get a dog for a child for this purpose and don't know what should be done in the way of preparing it and entering it for showing, drop me a line and I'll be glad to tell you what to do. I should add here that should you follow such a course the smart thing is to let the youngster handle all matters pertaining to conditioning the dog and the details necessary to entering it in a dog show. One of the easiest and best ways to introduce a youngster to show dogs is to buy a pup and enter it in a nearby match show. Such shows are not formalized bench shows but more often exhibit dogs competing against each that have no formal show experience or winnings.

What to look for when buying a dog? Well, I've described the procedure in other articles in your Elks Magazine but to brief them here, look for firm, pink gums, clean, white teeth, a clean breath, liveliness and avoid the pup that shows any signs of rash or an over-swollen stomach.

If the aristocratic pooch is out, and dog shows too, well, get any kind of dog for the boy or girl. In some places today pet shows are regularly held wherein a pedigree for a dog is wholly unnecessary. Prizes are given for the biggest dog, the smartest, the smallest, etc. The winning of a prize or the mere competition is a thrill for the child and a further inducement to give that dog better care and subsequent greater development of a sense of responsibility on the part of the boy or girl.

At what age should a youngster be before being given the care of a dog? Well, I'd say no younger than 10 to 12 years. If the child is naturally inclined toward kindness for animals then the age limit could safely be dropped to about eight although interests at that age are mercurial.

No I don't guarantee that the encouragement of a healthy hobby will keep the name of somebody's darling out of trouble, but it will help—especially if that hobby is a dog, and the responsibilities of its care be entrusted to a child.

What's your dog problem?

Here's a book by Ed Faust, In the Doghouse writer, that answers all usual problems of feeding, common sicknesses, tricks, training and general care of the dog. Its 48 pages are well printed and are illustrated with pictures of popular breeds. One authority says, "It is the most readable and understandable of all books on the subject."

Wake Up To More Comfort Without Nagging Backache

Nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness may be due to slowdown of kidney function. Doctors say good kidney function is very important to good health. When some everyday condition, such as stress and strain, causes this important function to slow down, many folks suffer nagging backache—feel miserable. Minor bladder irritations due to cold or wrong diet may cause getting up nights or frequent passages.

Don't neglect your kidneys if these conditions bother you. Try Doan's Pills—a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. It's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief from these discomforts—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

Don't let a premature "SPARE TIRE" make you look old!

Many a hard-working man develops a "pot" and looks old before his time. Not because he's truly fat or because of middle age. The reason is—his back and stomach muscles are constantly strained and tired and no longer support him properly. If that's your trouble, you can...

Look trimmer instantly!

Bracer Supporter Belt is the answer. Not a girdle or abdominal belt, Bracer is a man's garment. Supports back and stomach muscles firmly, healthfully. Helps pull your stomach back to its natural position. Lets you stand straighter, taller. And helps you...

TO LOS ANGELES FOR 90TH SESSION

Appropriately for a great patriotic fraternity, this year on Independence Day the Grand Lodge opens its 90th Grand Lodge Session in Los Angeles—the first time since 1936 that the Sessions have been held in this great city and the fifth time in the Order's history of Grand Lodge Conventions, dating from 1870.

Early last Fall the Los Angeles B.P.O. Elks Convention for the 1954 National Convention, Inc., of which Past Grand Exalted Ruler Micheal F. Shannon was President, Past Grand Exalted Ruler L. A. Lewis Vice-President and Robert S. Redington Executive Director, started plans for an outstanding program. After Mr. Shannon's death in November, Mr. Lewis succeeded him as President and every Elk in attendance at the Convention will appreciate the enthusiasm and foresight shown by the Committee in planning the program which appears elsewhere in this issue.

While, of course, the serious business of Grand Lodge matters occupies the four mornings of the Convention, entertainment is by no means neglected and for this Los Angeles is a particularly advantageous city for it encompasses so much. One of the memorable facets of the Convention will be the serious—and often lively, too—music of the Elk bands and choral groups. With the drill teams, these groups will come to Los Angeles at great personal effort, but a most rewarding one for those in attendance.

Delegates to our 90th Convention will enjoy one of the notable experiences of their lives in Elkdom.

33 YEARS OF SERVICE

With this issue, The Elks Magazine starts the 33rd year of its existence and service to the Order and individual members.

The first issue, of June, 1922, went to a membership of 812,000 while this issue will be sent to 1,140,000 Elks.

The membership of 1922 was divided among 1,360 lodges. Today's total number of lodges is 1,684.

And so in the first 32 years of the life of The Elks Magazine there has been an increase of 328,000 or nearly 41 per cent. In the same period there has been an increase in the number of lodges of 324 or 24 per cent.

While the Order has grown steadily in this same period, the day of extraordinarily large lodges appears to have past. The style must have changed.

In 1922 there were eight lodges with a membership of over 5,000 and one of the eight had a membership of over 10,000. Today there is only one lodge with a membership of over 5,000.

It seems highly probable that the lodges that were over 5,000 in 1922 and are less than 5,000 now have not lost much in the strength and importance of their community by their reduction in membership.

After all, the Order of Elks is largely a social organization and acquaintance and association among the members of the same lodge is a material factor in building the strength of the lodge and uniting each member for community work and charitable services and in effective patriotic support of the country in peace or in war. When you have in one lodge a membership of over 10,000 the general acquaintanceship among the members must be materially reduced and the possibility of effective performance similarly lessens.

In the year ending March 31, 1922, the charitable support recorded of the lodges of the Order amounted to $2.48 per capita.

At the close of the subordinate lodge fiscal year, March 31, 1954, the total expenditure of the lodges for charitable, educational and patriotic activities amounted to around $6,000,000. And so per capita expenditures of the individual members through their lodges has increased from $2.48 in 1922 to practically $6.00 in 1954.

The Elks Magazine represents today an organization very much stronger than the organization it represented in 1922. This means not only an increase in members but an increase in effective service to the members of the Order and to the communities in which they are located and the country of which these communities are a part. Every issue of the Magazine reflects the great community services of the lodges as well as the national scope of the Order.

At no time during the existence of the Order has the recognition and the outstanding qualities of leadership and service locally and nationally been as well understood and as highly regarded as it is today.

This may well properly inspire those who are responsible for the production of The Elks Magazine to make it and each succeeding issue more truly representative of the character of its membership, of the strength and standing of the Order and to such, constantly increasing improvement in the general character of the magazine in its articles, its fiction, in its reporting of the Grand Lodge Officers and the subordinate lodges.

TO CLEAR UP A POINT

While, of course, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks shares with all Americans the regard and respect we have for our great Canadian neighbors there is a point that in some quarters is not fully understood. As a fraternal organization, by a Statute passed by the Grand Lodge in 1890, our Order has restricted its membership to citizens of the United States and its Territories. Consequently, while to some extent the B.P.O.E. of Canada is modelled after our fraternity, there is no connection whatsoever between the two organizations. About 50 years ago there was some thought of establishing a reciprocal arrangement entirely limited to social exchange, but on consideration this plan did not materialize and it was definitely decided that, with all respect to the Canadian fraternity, our Order would be entirely a fraternity of the United States, with American citizenship a basic tenet of membership.
