TOM WRIGLEY WRITES FROM WASHINGTON

MR. AND MRS. TAXPAYER can sit back and relax. They're pretty sure to get a break next year in Federal income taxes. Just what form the break will take depends upon maneuverings between Republicans and Democrats in Congress when tax reduction measures are tossed into the legislative hopper next month. It's strictly a political situation. Treasury revenues, as such, do not warrant any reduction in taxes. A presidential election will be held a year from now, however, with all of the House and one third of the Senate to be elected. Both sides, therefore, already are digging up good and sufficient reasons for giving taxpayers, meaning voters, a little relief, even though the budget is not yet balanced. The programs of that relief will make lively debate. Some Congressmen favor raising exemptions from the present $600 to $800 with increases also for dependents. Others are for a flat 10 percent slash in lower brackets to benefit small taxpayers, who incidentally constitute the most voters. A minority will oppose any reduction whatsoever.

SHY SHERMAN ADAMS

Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, shuns publicity. The heavy responsibilities placed upon him during Mr. Eisenhower's illness have not changed him one whit. He stays behind the scenes but no person in Washington knows more about what's going on than the quiet former governor of New Hampshire. Gov. Adams has been at the White House all through the Eisenhower administration, yet few people would recognize him if they passed him on the street. News photographers seldom get a chance to snap his picture. His office in the White House is one of the busiest in Washington, but it is a quiet place where a staff of loyal assistants take pride in serving the "Governor" with smooth efficiency.

LITTLE GREEN BOOK

Now that it's time for winter entertaining, hostesses nervously thumb a little green book as they plan cocktail parties and dinners. It is the new edition of "The Social List of Washington", a "Who's Who" of officials and residents with their ratings according to rank. Mrs. Carolyn Hagner Shaw of Georgetown publishes the book. Every time it comes out she doesn't answer her phone for a couple of weeks. No one crashes Mrs. Shaw's social register. Her files of the background of Washington families are insured for $15,000 and are kept locked in a safe. Up to 1930 social lists in Washington were based on blue blooded ancestry. But people came in with no social background, no "blood" and were accepted. Now a person gets into the little green book on official position or on social instead of family background. One seldom hears today of Washington's real "Blue bloods", the "cave-dwellers" of Georgetown as they were known.

MAMIE'S PIE RECIPE

Here's Mrs. Eisenhower's recipe for pumpkin chiffon pie, just published in the Congressional Club Cook Book. 3 beaten egg yolks,  $\frac{3}{4}$  cup brown sugar,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups cooked pumpkin,  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup milk,  $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon salt, cinnamon and nutmeg, 1 envelope Knox gelatin,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup cold water, 3 stiffly beaten egg whites,  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup granulated sugar. Combine egg yolks, brown sugar, pumpkin, milk, salt and spice. Cook in double boiler until thick, stirring constantly. Soak gelatin in cold water, stir into hot mixture. Chill until partly set. Beat egg white, add granulated sugar and beat stiff. Fold into gelatine mixture. Pour into pie shell and chill until set. Garnish with whipped cream. Makes one big pie or 8 individual pies. Mamie says it's her favorite recipe.

HURRICANE TRACKER

Navy's latest gimmick to track down hurricanes is a floating weather station which is dropped in the path of the storm and automatically gives out wind, speed, and direction.

CHARTREUSE CAUTION

His Royal Highness Prince Albert of Belgium passed his auto driver's test for the District of Columbia but stumbled on one question. When they asked him about the amber light, the Prince looked puzzled. "Amber—chartreuse", said State Dept. Protocol Officer Conger. "Oh, chartreuse" said the Prince, "Caution." The Prince came through with a perfect score.

PILOT JUST RIDES

On newest Air Force jets the pilot will go along mostly just for the ride. As soon as he gets it in the air and spots the target on his radar screen, he turns a few knobs and says, "Sic 'em." Automatic controls take over, steer the jet to the target, release the rockets, and turn it back for home. The pilot then lands it. All F-102 interceptors will have the new system. The mechanism has more delicate parts than 200 TV sets.

NEW FEDERAL BUILDINGS

Washington will have nine new Federal buildings costing over $200,000,000 in the next five years, Public Building Commissioner Peter A. Strobel reports. Four already are authorized, Smithsonian Museum, Atomic Energy Commission, Central Intelligence Agency and another State Department Building. All will be built south of Constitution Avenue, mostly where temporary buildings still are a blot on the landscape.

NAVY COOLER

The way Navy makes its men in the service comfortable is really making Army and Air Force brass sit up and fret. They now have little electric fans inside their rubberized suits to keep them from sweating. The fan weighs a pound and is fastened to the back of the suit between the shoulder blades. It runs on a 1.3 mercury cell battery which lasts an hour. There is a hole in the back of the suit and the fan exhausts moisture-loaded air through it. In three minutes the humidity drops from 90 to 50 percent.

POTOMAC POWDER

P. O. Dept. cleaned out its old files and got rid of enough paper to fill 170 box-cars . . . Bureau of Public Roads has openings for highway engineer trainees at $3,415 to $4,345 . . . A dept. store displaying sports wear put in a fish pond where kids and grownups catch trout. They put the fish in a freezer while mother shops . . . Butchers union may ask Congress for a law for compulsory inspection of poultry same as now provided for red meat . . . Busiest girl in town with sweetest disposition is Miss Rose Mary Woods, V. P. Nixon's secretary . . . Electric washing machines are tax free but clothes dryers get a 10 percent bite because they are a luxury . . . Why be lonely? There are 32 old-age clubs in Washington.

Elks National Foundation —

“The Joy of Giving”

Past Grand Exalted Ruler John F. Malley, Chairman of the Elks National Foundation, forwards this letter, which he received from Mrs. Macy B. Moree, of Clinton, Missouri, as an indication of the high scholarship level of recipients of the Foundation grants in the field of cerebral palsy.

“I have just received my grades from Denver University and would like to report to you that I made four A's and one B. All of my studies pertained to the rehabilitation of the handicapped. I am also happy to say that I received a Master of Arts degree in Speech Pathology and Audiology at the end of the term.”

As income tax time draws near again, it should be remembered that all donations to the Elks National Foundation are deductible. The Elks National Foundation has long been recognized by tax authorities as a worthy, charitable organization. Therefore, contributions to the Foundation Fund can be considered not only as a helpful deed, but also as a saving on income tax to the extent of the individual's deduction.

Here's another note of appreciation from a recipient of an Elks National Foundation grant—Landis M. Stetler of Baltimore, Md.

“It is my pleasure to report a very pleasant and profitable summer at Syracuse University thanks to the Elks National Foundation Grant and the authorization of the Baltimore Lodge. Considerable progress in the education and rehabilitation of cerebral palsied children has been made all over the country. It was a most stimulating experience to learn of the most recent developments in this area and to associate with the enthusiastic people doing this work.

“May I again express my sincere gratitude to the Elks National Foundation and the Baltimore Lodge for the assistance given me.”

While many young people have the desire to continue their education, all too often the financial assistance is not available, and that is where the “Most Valuable Student Awards” of the Foundation are so helpful, as witnessed by this letter which Past Grand Exalted Ruler Malley received from Miss Ava Louise Merrill, of Portland, Maine.

“I wish to thank all members of the Elks Foundation for the financial assistance given to enable me to continue my education. Before I was notified of your award, I had every indication to believe that I could not possibly finance even a year in college. That is why I feel so indebted and grateful to you . . . you made college possible for me!

“Words could never express my deep appreciation. So it is with most profound gratitude that I wish to pay tribute in the only way I know how to your wonderful organization by saying from the depths of my heart . . . Thank You! May I prove worthy of your favor!”

Mrs. Mary Lou Rush, Director of Speech Clinic, Saint Louis University, writes as follows: “May I extend my thanks to the Elks National Foundation for expense money for Antonio Maienza's study at Northwestern University . . . We are agreed that the information and application of therapy he learned at Northwestern will be of great value in our treatment of cerebral palsied children”.

I HAD TO EARN MORE MONEY

So I sent $6 to The Wall Street Journal

High prices and taxes were getting me down. I had to have more money or reduce my standard of living. Like Alice in Wonderland, I had to run faster to stay in the same place.

So I started reading The Wall Street Journal. I heeded its warnings. I cashed in on the ideas it gave me for earning extra income and cutting expenses. I got the money I needed. Now I'm slowly forging ahead. Believe me, reading The Journal every day is a wonderful get-ahead plan.

This story is typical. The Journal is a wonderful aid to men making $7000 to $20,000 a year. To assure speedy delivery to you anywhere in the U.S., The Journal is printed daily in four cities—New York, Chicago, Dallas and San Francisco.

The Wall Street Journal has the largest staff of writers on business and finance. It costs $20 a year but in order to acquaint you with The Journal, we make this offer: You can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $6. Just send this ad with check for $6. Or tell us to bill you. Address: The Wall Street Journal, 44 Broad St., New York 4, N.Y. EM-12

BY WILLIAM HOLDER

You didn't build up a character like Moran's and then throw it away overnight . . . truths you lived by couldn't be discarded for a friend.

HAMILTON sat in his living room and watched the big trees push their shadows slowly across Chestnut Street. He had known some bad days, but this one topped them all and it hadn't ended yet. And how it would end he wasn't sure, but he thought he knew. He'd been sitting there for an hour, trying to make up his mind.

Out on the lawn, little Rob and smaller Lucy were playing with the pup Moran had given them two months before. He remembered, too, that he'd borrowed Joe's power mower last week and had forgotten to return it. Well, he'd bring it back, and he certainly wouldn't be borrowing it again for some time to come. Not if he knew Moran. You didn't build up a character like Moran's and then throw it away overnight. The truths you lived by were a part of you and you simply couldn't discard them. Well, maybe you acted out of character once in awhile, but not Joe Moran.

He gently fingered the lump on the back of his head and thought of last night. As manager, he'd been the last one out of the Mighty Market, and in his pocket had been an envelope containing the late afternoon receipts, which he would put in the night deposit box at the bank. He'd been locking the back door, near the parking lot, when he'd been slugged from behind. He had turned and gotten a good look at the man before the blackjack had descended again and blacked him out.

He supposed it was unlucky, too, that Moran had been the detective sergeant in charge of the affair. He had told Moran that yes, he had seen the thief, and they had gone to headquarters to have a look at the rogues' gallery. They had been looking at pictures for half an hour before they came across his own. He had been as surprised as Moran. He had been younger then, and he had worn a mustache, but it was unmistakably he.

And he knew Moran had recognized the picture. There had been a sudden straightening of the heavy shoulders, a quick indrawing of breath. He didn't know whether he or Moran had made the sound. Moran had paused on the page for only a moment, then had turned the file, and they had gone on to the other faces, the other meaningless names. Moran had not looked at him and had said nothing, but Hamilton had known.

He knew, too, how Moran's methodical mind would work. He would take no action until he was sure of what he was doing. But then he would act. Nothing would stop him, Hamilton knew. He was fully aware of Moran's reverence for the law and for his own job of enforcing it.

How long had it been, now—six, seven years? A long time that was part of the past. The past that catches up with you.

His wife came into the room. "Harry, what are you doing, sitting here alone? Come into the kitchen and help me with dinner. How does your head feel?"

He said, "Sit down, Kate. I have some

FARM BOSS WITH A GREEN THUMB

A HALF-DOZEN YEARS AGO word seeped through to a national magazine that not all baseball front-office men were bumbling, inarticulate dopes whose conversational gambits were limited to, "All we have left are a couple of seats behind a pole," or "we needed that seventh game in the World Series to break even."

There was a fellow, they were advised, Fresco Thompson, whose wit and witticisms were wafting through the major leagues—at training camps, at dreary doubleheaders, and in smoky convention halls—like some tingling ocean breeze.

An able young man was put on the job immediately; was told to leave no stone unturned to catch Fresco in print. "Go as far," he was advised, "as to actually live in Brooklyn if you think it's necessary." Fresco had just been elevated to the directorship of the Dodgers' far-flung farm system.

The young man buttonholed hundreds of people, in and out of baseball. He carefully filled several notebooks with anecdotal material on Thompson, on Fresco the player, the manager and the front-office man. The end product looked, and read, like something vaudevillians used to buy on the installment plan from some central gag agency when they knew the act was in desperate need of a paint job but there wasn't enough money to hire a first-class gag writer to help save the act.

For Thompson the end product was a source of acute irritation from the third word of the title, "Baseball's Mr. Wisecrack," down to the last bit of Thompsoniana, the one about Brooklyn being so well equipped with mechanical devices in spring training—mechanical pitchers and mechanical ball retrievers—that "maybe (and here Fresco could be visualized as giving his straw skimmer a real saucy twirl) yessir, maybe next year we can have mechanical batters and then we'll be able to dispense entirely with the ball players!"

"That article," declared Lafayette Fresco Thompson, vice-president of the Dodgers, his wide scholarly-appearing brow wrinkling reflectively in a slight frown below his wavy greying hair, "made me out to be something of a clown. That I'm not."

That is a sentiment to which the New York Yankees, humbled by the first World championship Dodger team in history, will subscribe one hundred per cent. Two victories by Johnny Podres murdered them—the young lefthander is a Thompson product. So are the other young pitchers who worked in the Series—the Karl Spooners, the Roger Craigs, the Don Bessents.

The Clem Labine who pitched such effective relief was brought up from St. Paul in 1951 because Thompson thought the sinker-ball ace was ready. The Sandy

ROD & GUN

BY DAN HOLLAND

Florida—where large-mouth bass really are large.

ANYONE WHO HAS ever read a resort folder knows that Florida is the home of the renowned marlin, the high-leaping sailfish, the graceful dolphin and the rough-and-tumble tarpon. He knows, also, that the fertile coastal waters abound in king mackerel, bonefish, amberjack and other glamorous game fish too numerous to mention. The person who has caught any of these famed fish has discovered that they are just as exciting as their advance notices would indicate, and he also has discovered, incidentally, that they are somewhat expensive.

Any Florida folder designed to attract tourist fishermen naturally stresses these spectacular salt-water fish. Near the bottom of the list and somewhat forgotten in all the excitement occasionally creeps in a name that is dirt common alongside these others; yet it is a respected and magic name among knowing sport-fishermen in all the forty-eight states. It is a name that needs no introduction and no ballyhoo. This is the large-mouthed black bass. And Florida is full of bass, plumb full of them, all the way from the St. Johns River in the north to the Everglades in the south. They not only live in every lake, river and slough, no matter how small, but some of them are pudgy old fellows big enough to pop the eyes right out of most fresh-water fishermen.

This will give an indication. As a northern bass fisherman I started out when I was hardly big enough to wrestle a worm on a hook. After a number of years of day-fishing and night-fishing, plug-fishing and fly-fishing, I finally caught a three-pounder. That was a big moment. I have kept at it since with a diligence common to bass fishermen, and at this date the largest I have landed outside Florida weighed just over four pounds—and I am boasting, not complaining. In contrast was the first day I ever fished for bass in Florida. It was in the Imperial River, not outstanding by any means as Florida bass waters go. In the morning we fished downriver into brackish water, plug-casting for snook and tarpon, and in the afternoon we went upriver for bass. At about 3 pm I landed my fortieth bass, and he weighed eight-and-one-half pounds!

Any northern fisherman will admit that a four-pounder is a wallop big bass. I don't care how long a man has been at it or how many hundreds of bass he may have caught, he will do plenty of talking when he comes home with one of that weight. And a bass more than twice that size—well, it was just out of all reason the way I was accustomed to thinking. Of course I will admit that I am a pretty good fisherman if forced into it, but not good enough to rate anything like that in the first three hours. If I could boat one that size, there are thousands of bass fishermen throughout the country who would have a right to expect one even larger.

AND these bigmouths from the deep south are bass through and through. They have the same pugnacious attitude toward a lure that has made their northern brothers favorites with fishermen through the years, and they jump as well as any largemouth. That eight-and-one-half-pounder jumped clear of the water twice and broke the surface several other times. They possess the typical sporting characteristics of the bass tribe, and nothing more need be said.

to try for a big one, no one could predict for certain. There are literally hundreds of lakes and rivers that have bass as big as those in the Imperial. There is one place in particular, though, that I have wanted to try, and I am going to do it some day if I live long enough. This is Fisheating Creek.

One day we stopped to talk with a colorful Florida friend who was casting in one of the drainage canals along the edge of the Everglades in the southern end of the state.

"You know," he commented, dropping his lure against the opposite bank of the canal, "you wouldn't believe it to look at it, but there's fish in this little old canal 'most as long as a dog."

"Been fishing much?" one of us asked.

"Not since yesterday. Lady and her little boy were hanging around here—wanted to know where to catch a fish. Ah wasn't doing anything, so I took them out. You know, that little old boy sat on his mamma's lap and caught a big old bass. They were the tickledest people you ever did see. She talked hunting most of the time. Said she had some fine pointers up home, and maybe she's send me a pup. There's that old 'maybe' again!"

"What are you doing these days beside fishing?" someone asked.

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL

27 September 1955

Gentlemen:

Major General John A. Klein, The Adjutant General of the Army, has forwarded a copy of his letter of 15 August, concerning the donation of cigarettes by your organization to American military personnel serving in the Far East. To this, I wish to add the appreciation of the men who will receive them.

It is especially pleasing to note that this donation included the two millionth cigarette given by the Elks National Service Commission in the past nineteen months, and that this is one of the largest totals ever amassed. Your contributions which have been distributed to United States military patients in hospitals in Korea, Okinawa and Japan have added considerably to the overall welfare of these personnel.

On behalf of the personnel of the United States Army Forces, Far East and Eighth United States Army, may I again extend our thanks to your organization for their fine work.

Sincerely,

The Elks National Service Commission
3257-58 Chrysler Building East
New York, New York

Gentlemen:

I have recently been advised by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of your latest donation of cigarettes for our service personnel in the Far East. This was the twentieth donation in the past twenty months, during which period you have donated a total of 2,100,000 cigarettes.

The Department of the Army is quite proud and grateful for the deep interest your commission has taken in our personnel especially during the months succeeding cessation of hostilities in Korea. Your special efforts in continuing this project are certainly worthy of special praise.

Of immeasurable importance to any commander in the field is the morale of each member of his command. As I have mentioned previously, your continuous flow of cigarettes to service men and women in the Far East has certainly played a part in adding to their morale. In order that the Commanding General, United States Army Forces, Far East, and Eighth U. S. Army, may be advised of your continued efforts on behalf of his command, a copy of this letter is being forwarded to that command.

May I again thank you for your wonderful efforts.

Sincerely yours,

Dear General White:

Thank you for your gracious letter of September 27th regarding the shipments of cigarettes to our service personnel in the Far East.

The heart-warming letters and postals received from the boys in Korea indicate clearly their appreciation for this little remembrance to them. The idea that they are in our thoughts seems to mean much to them.

You might be interested to know that as long as our defenders are stationed in this remote part of the world, they will never be forgotten by the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. We consider it, not alone our duty, but more important, a privilege to be permitted to make this simple gesture.

Tulsa, Okla., Elkdom was represented by 45 members and ladies in the recent 17-hour Telethon sent out over KOTV from the Tulsa Fairgrounds Pavilion for the benefit of the 200,000 muscular dystrophy victims of the country. One of the dignitaries who appeared on the telecast was Past Exalted Ruler Earl E. James, pictured at right as he was introduced by Master of Ceremonies John W. King. The Telethon realized more than $40,000 for research work.

An Orange Lodge Grows in Texas

Under the supervision of D.D. G. M. Brassard, Orange Lodge No. 284 (its original number) returned to active participation in the Elk family with 99 members who elected Carl W. Rollins as their first Exalted Ruler. The initiatory work was capably handled by the officers of Port Arthur Lodge, No. 284's sponsor, with nine lodges of the District represented in the audience. Among the out-

Assisting in the ritualistic work were several Past Presidents of the Texas Elks Assn., including W. S. Traill, former Grand Lodge Committeeman Raymond L. Wright, Carl R. Mann of the Grand Lodge Credentials Committee, and H. S. Rubenstein, State Secy. E. C. Bunch, Pres. of the Assn., made the principal address, and State Vice-Pres. Ed. F. Burgdorf, on behalf of other branches of Texas Elkdom presented several gifts to the new lodge.

Newton, Kans., Elks Dedicate Home

Past Grand Exalted Ruler Henry C. Warner had high praise for the members of Newton Lodge No. 706 when he officiated at the dedication of their new home.

A handsome, $350,000 edifice, the building was completed and occupied last February with not a debt outstanding. The formal dedication ceremonies were postponed until September, when 300 affiliates, including John B. Dickey and Milo McKee, two of the lodge's Charter Members, were on hand.

Mr. Warner's address climaxed the formal ritual exemplified by Elk dignitaries from various Kansas communities, headed by D.D. Charles Bishop, a P.E.R. of the host lodge.

E.R. Cecil Eberle and his staff extended a welcome to the many out-of-town guests who attended both the dedication and the open house program celebrating the occasion.

W. H. Harth, Prominent South Carolina Elk, Mourned

The sudden death of William H. Harth on Sept. 12th brought sadness to his many friends throughout Elkdom. An active and devoted leader in the affairs of Columbia, S. C., Lodge, No. 1190, Mr. Harth had served that branch of the Order as Exalted Ruler on five different occasions, the first time in 1927.

Following a year as District Deputy, he became Secretary of Columbia Lodge in 1931, a post he held until 1937. In Equipped with a respirator and other life-saving devices, the truck has already served on several rescue missions, notably in connection with tornado-hit Blackwell, Okla.

Shortly before his death, Clark C. Griffith, owner of the Washington Senators, third from left, was made an Honorary Life Member of Washington, D. The 73-year-old steam pumper of the Narragansett Fire Dept. was a big attraction at the annual South Kingstown, R. I., Lodge clambake. The ancient engine, in perfect working order, has been retired from service to be used very successfully in preparing the seafood for clambakes, as 275 South Kingstown Elks can testify. At left E.R. Everett R. Sykes looks on as Co-Chairman George Raitano checks the steam pressure. At right is Fred Folcarelli, assistant chef.

1932 he was elected Grand Esteemed Loyal Knight and in 1942 he again served as District Deputy. In 1945 he was appointed to the Grand Lodge Antlers Council, later serving on the Grand Lodge Auditing Committee. He was a member of the Grand Lodge Credentials Committee from 1950 until this year.

A native of Columbia, and a city employe for more than 40 years, he was Director of the City's Park and Recreation Department at the time of his passing. A veteran of World War I, Mr. Harth had directed his Elk activities in recent years mainly in the interests of our servicemen. As State Chairman of the Elks Service Commission, he achieved great benefits for the members of our Armed Forces stationed in his State, and for the veterans who are hospitalized there.

Mr. Harth, whose only son was killed in action during the second World War, is survived by his wife, daughter and three grandchildren whose sense of loss is shared by all who knew him.

Hickory Elks Send Boys to No. Car. Camp

The members of Hickory Lodge No. 1654 established a new record this summer by sponsoring 87 deserving boys on a two-week stay at the No. Car. Elks Camp. Two Trailways Buses brought the youngsters to the Hendersonville spot this year, under personal escort of a large group of interested sponsors.

A favorite undertaking of No. 1654, the screening of 300 boys recommended by religious and educational leaders, the Salvation Army and other groups requires much time and effort on the part of the Hickory Elks. However, they do the job willingly, well repaid by the splendid results found in the boys' outlook and character after their vacation at this well-run camp where they find clean living, good sportsmanship and an awareness of God through daily religious services.

Smashing all records for the district, Hickory Lodge sponsored a two-week vacation at the outstanding North Carolina Elks Camp for 87 youngsters who made the trip under Elk escort in two chartered, air-conditioned Trailways Buses. En route, the boys stopped for a picnic.

Telling its own story of Elk Service to Youth is the prize-winning float entered by Hermiston, Ore., Lodge in the Pendleton Round-Up in which it won first honors in the fraternal section, and the Umatilla County Fair parade in which it captured second place.

Asheville, N. C., Lodge's Annual Orphans' Day Picnic found several hundred children from various orphanages enjoying an all-day program of wholesome recreation. With Eugene S. Holcombe as Chairman, the Elks and their ladies served a healthy picnic lunch to the young guests.

A Message from the Grand Exalted Ruler

PLAN ELKDOM'S PROGRESS

WHENEVER our country needs anything, the Elks pitch in and provide it. Recent years have brought a tremendous increase in the need of youth work, and our Order has responded with action as always. Under the leadership of the Grand Lodge Youth Activities Committee, Lodges and State Associations have greatly expanded their youth-serving programs. These will pay rich dividends in the years to come.

The Youth Activities Committee recently distributed its program for the year, in which it made many sound suggestions for the development of youth activities by our lodges and State Associations. I hope that these ideas will be put to practical use. There simply is no better way to serve our community and our country than a well-planned, constructive youth program that helps to build good, solid, American character in our youngsters. Find out what your community's needs are, determine what kind of a program is needed, then get your lodge solidly behind it and you'll find that there is nothing like a sound youth program for developing enthusiastic cooperation among your members.

Certainly every Elks lodge should participate in the two major projects of our Grand Lodge Youth Program—the Elks National Youth Leadership Contest and Elks National Youth Day. Through the Leadership Contest, our Order gives deserved recognition locally, in each state and nationally, to the boys and girls who have distinguished themselves as leaders among their own associates. We are encouraging youth to develop their talents for leadership in a democratic society.

Again this year, May 1 will be observed throughout our Order as Elks National Youth Day, when we pay tribute to our boys and girls for their accomplishments as junior citizens. The acts of a few unhappy youngsters tend to stigmatize a whole generation as juvenile delinquents. Elks National Youth Day puts the problem in proper focus by demonstrating that the overwhelming majority of our boys and girls are decent, earnest, law-abiding, patriotic and God-fearing. Now is the time to start planning your lodge's program for Elks Youth Day May 1. Make it a significant event that will command the respect and support of your community.

Our Membership Control Program, for the reduction of lapsation and to realize a five per cent gain in membership, is forging ahead on both fronts. For the first time in years, many lodges have taken a critical look at their dues collection methods and lapsation problem, and are really doing something about it. This is going to result in a healthy improvement in dues payment.

Lodges in every state will honor their State Elks Association President in January by initiating classes dedicated to these able leaders of Elkdom. I hope that every lodge will initiate a substantial number of candidates, carefully selected, as always, of course, so that the class will be the splendid tribute that it ought to be.

Fittingly, the Grand Lodge Committee on Lodge Activities has asked our lodges to devote a day in December to a fund-raising activity for the Elks National Foundation. In this Christmas season, how better can we recognize its significance than with our gifts of money that will enable our own wonderful benevolence agency better to manifest to all mankind the love that He, whose birth we celebrate, taught us to have in our hearts always. This is the season of giving. Let us give first to the Foundation.

To all of my Brothers, and to their families, I extend the wish that the peace and happiness, which are the promise of this Holy Christmastide, be yours in joyous abundance.

The Elks and the Boy Scouts

BY COMMANDER THOMAS J. KEANE

WELL, it's the Elks for me, sir."

I admit I was surprised. Not that the young officer to whom I was speaking had mentioned the Elks. I had known the BPOE well and favorably for many, many years. It was the fact that he seemed to me to be too young to join the Elks. All the members of that Order that I knew were rather staid, dignified, successful men who had reached a moderate degree of maturity. I was later to learn that a large portion of the members were not quite so staid, not quite so dignified—yes, quite successful—but certainly not very old.

The war in Europe was just over and I had received my orders to proceed to another command in the South West Pacific. Before leaving I had had a chat with all of my officers—all rather young—who had served with great devotion and efficiency as members of the staff of my naval command in Europe.

I was asking each one what he intended doing when he returned to the United States. I was suggesting some of the organizations that they might join, such as the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, perhaps one of the service clubs, like the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Most of them seemed to be impressed with what I suggested and stated that it was their intention to join one of the groups of which I had spoken.

But the young officer, who by the way was one of my favorites, and one of the best, was very positive that the only organization that he was going to join was the Elks.

I thought it would be interesting to find out why he wanted to join the Elks, rather than any of the others, and asked him.

"Well, sir," he said, "my family lived on 'the other side of the tracks' and I had a tough time when I was a kid. When I was twelve I was asked to join the Boy Scouts. My crowd did not think much of the Scouts, but a friend of my father's brought me to a meeting one night. Very much to my surprise I liked it, came back again and finally joined the troop. After three years I had become an Eagle Scout, the highest rank in Scouting. Now as I look back on it I know that what I learned in that troop changed the whole course of my life. It was only after I had been in the troop for over a year that I realized that there would be no troop in that part of town if it weren't for the Elks Lodge that sponsored it.

"Well, sir," he continued, "I want to join the Elks. There are many reasons why I want to, but I admit that way down in the bottom of my heart I hope to be able to help some other kid, who 'lives across the tracks.' I figure I can do that by being a member of an Elks Lodge."

Since then I have often wondered whether the Elks Lodge that sponsored the troop to which this young man belonged ever fully realized what a grand thing they had done for him and for the community to which he belonged—and will belong!

When the war in Europe was over I was transferred to the South West Pacific theatre where I was stationed until after the defeat of the Japanese. From there I returned home to the United States where I arrived safe and sound after five years of very active service abroad.

During the eight years since the end of the war I have learned a lot about the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In the spring of 1947 I attended a meeting at which were present five Past Grand Exalted Rulers of the Elks, who were discussing with the National Officials of the Boy Scouts of America ways and means by which they could be of help to more boys throughout the

for Elks who TRAVEL

BY HORACE SUTTON

Arizona has 230 clear days a year now—yet they say it used to be at the North Pole.

A BUNCH OF BRITISH scientists came up with the notion not long ago that, of all places, the North Pole was once located in Arizona, now a land replete with cactus, desert, sun, swimming pools, and tourists. This North Pole business was supposed to have been the case something like 600 million years ago and, to be sure, Arizona has had plenty of time to thaw out since. Today the sun is said, by usually reliable sources, to shine 86 per cent of all the time it possibly could. There are some 230 clear days a year and the mean monthly temperature, which really isn't very mean at all, comes to 70.3 degrees. Since the flowers and the tourists bloom all winter long the living is easy and outdoorsy. Almost every motel has its own patio and swimming pool. Some are even equipped with stables.

Before the war the Southwest was largely a playground for the rich and indolent, but lately the Valley of the Sun area, in the general vicinity of Phoenix, has been spending roughly $2 million a year on new accommodations. Whereas the pre-war places are still on hand and ready and able to relieve you of $80 a day for a suite (meals included, of course), you can now find a modern, cheerful, attractive motel for the likes of $8 a day without food. There are a variety of good restaurants both in the towns like Phoenix, Scottsdale and Tucson and also tucked away in the surrounding hills.

In terms of air travel, the Southwest is two hours from Los Angeles, seven hours from Chicago and the mid-west and a bit less than eleven hours from the east. Trans World Airlines, which descends at Phoenix, points out that most ranches will arrange to pick you up and deliver you back to the airport at no extra charge, an added inducement since most of them are salted away in the foothills. As for prices in the top of the season, which runs from February to mid-April, the Kay-El-Bar Ranch at Wickenburg, a town which seems to be world ranch headquarters, would run about $15 a day or $105 for a week in the sun plus air fare back and forth—or train if you prefer. This tariff includes room, bath, meals, horseback riding over the desert trails, a cowboy to guide you, swimming in the pool, square dances at night, chuck wagon picnics off in the desert, and such unlikely endeavors as panning for gold.

If there should come a time this winter when the wind whistles and the bones creak, but there just isn't time for a full-fledged vacation, you might consider with some appreciation a four-day weekend provided by the Arizona Manor Hotel. From January 10 to April 15 the four-day hiatus for each of two persons comes to $33.50, a fee which takes in a room and bath, transportation back and forth from the airport, but no meals. Between November and January the tariff for the same operation is $21.50.

American Airlines, in association with Avis rent-a-car System, have organized a package tour of Arizona including a taste of ranch life, a look at the Grand Canyon, and overnights in the west's best motels. Here is how it works: You fly to Phoenix and there pick up your rental car at the airport. It is a short drive to the Western Village Motel, a drive-in that looks like a western village, although somewhat plusher than the pioneers had it. On the second day you buzz out of Phoenix via Route 89 through Wittman and Morristown arriving at Wickenburg. Once it was a mining town and indeed they still weigh ore in the general store, but now it is also, as I have indicated, the headquarters for dude ranching, an endeavor that has become almost as profitable as mining.

You leave 89 beyond Prescott in favor of Alternate 89 through Clarksdale and from there make the side trip to Montezuma Castle National Monument where you can see the Pueblo cliff dwellings preserved from prehistory. The suggested route then is to take in Oak Creek Canyon with its steep and colorful walls rising 1,500 feet above the valley. You can put in overnight at El Rancho Motel at Flagstaff.

The third day will take you north on 89 to Cameron, then east on 64 to Grand Canyon National Park. There ought to be plenty of time to drive along the rim. After a good look at the tremendous rent in the earth's surface, you can head back in the afternoon stopping that night at the Sea Shell Motel in Holbrook. If you're up early the next morning take off for the Painted Desert, a mix of mesas and buttes, then south to the Petrified Forest. Beyond is the Salt River Canyon which will take you to Globe, Arizona's biggest copper lode. You'll be back in Phoenix in the evening and back abed in the Western Village Motel.

On the fifth and final day you can drive right to the airport, leave your car and climb aboard the plane for the trip back home. The tour price for two persons in a room comes to $59 per person—three in a room, $41 per person. This tab includes the use of the automobile for five days, a maximum of 700 miles of driving and gas, oil, and insurance, lodging at Western Village Motel in Phoenix for two nights, the first and the last, and two nights lodging on the road. The air fare round trip from New York is $265.90, from Chicago, $182.10, from Dallas, $110.10.

There is much to be said, too, for the Tucson area, farther south, just sixty-five miles from the Mexican border. Four flags have flown over Tucson—Spanish, Mexican, the U.S., and the Confederate. Some mysterious types who lived without flags inhabited the place before our civilization began, but later it became the home of the Papago and Apache Indians. The Spaniards came looking for gold and

News of the State Associations

BANNER YEAR REVIEWED BY CALIFORNIA ELKDOM

Four days of intense activity, highlighted by the presence of Grand Exalted Ruler John L. Walker and his wife, kept nearly 10,000 Elks and their ladies on the go during the 41st Annual Convention of the California Elks Association. Attendance never flagged for a moment during the smoothly handled sessions, with large and attentive audiences on hand at all times.

Opened by retiring Pres. Robert P. Mohrbacker on Oct. 6th, the first business session was held in the handsome new home of San Diego Elksdom, with those present privileged to hear one of Mr. Walker's eloquently dynamic talks, following his introduction by Past Grand Exalted Ruler L. A. Lewis. Another former leader of the Order, Dr. Robert South Barrett, spoke briefly at this session and made the principal address at the banquet honoring Mr. Mohrbacker that evening.

Both distinguished speakers stressed the outstanding accomplishments of the California Elks Major Project which aided 350 cerebral palsy victims during the past year. This work was the main topic under consideration at the Friday morning business session, when Chairman C. P. Hebenstreit read his Committee's proud report before a crowd estimated at 3,000. The magnificent achievements of the 14 therapists who operate the Project's mobile units throughout the State, and who were introduced at this gathering, were dramatized by the presence of seven-year-old Dickie Swarner who pedaled his tricycle around the theater's stage—no longer forced to wear his cumbersome leg braces, thanks to the Elk-sponsored therapy he has received.

At the conclusion of the report, during which all members of the Committee were presented, donations totaling $108,000 for this work, realized through the famous Piggy Bank activity, were made by representatives of California's 117 lodges, with Palo Alto Lodge's $12,921.82 the largest single donation. On this occasion, Long Beach Elksdom turned over to the Major Project Committee a fully-equipped $2,400 station wagon and a cash gift of $2,600 as a tribute to retiring Pres. Mohrbacker, a P.E.R. of that lodge.

FORTHCOMING STATE ASSOCIATION MEETINGS

Washington	Port Angeles	Jan. 13-14
Oregon	Corvallis	Jan. 14
South Carolina	Sumter	Jan. 19-20
Michigan	Jackson	Jan. 21-22
Montana	Red Lodge	Jan. 28-29

The California Elks' Veterans Service Committee report was also delivered at this meeting by its capable Chairman Robert N. Traver. The session came to a close with an impressively sensitive Memorial Service at which Past State Pres. Edward A. Keller presided, P.D.D. Russell Waite delivered the address and the Assn.'s long-time Chaplain, Rev. D. Todd Gillmor offered the prayers. The Eleven O'Clock Toast was delivered by Past Grand Exalted Ruler Lewis, and a pleasing musical background was provided by the Grossmont Red Robe Choir.

A memorable feature of the conclave was the Eighth Annual Festival of Music in which eight Elk Glee Clubs appeared singly and in combined choral arrangements, with several operatic solos by Miss Dolores Davis. This program took place at the Balboa Bowl, scene of the Drill Team competition which saw top honors go to Inglewood in Class "A" and Alhambra in Class "B."

Mr. Lewis handled the installation of the officers who will serve until the 1956 Convention at San Jose. Led by James B. Nielsen of Watsonville as President, they are Treas. Robert Walker, Santa Ana; Secy. Edgar W. Dale, Richmond; Chaplain Rev. David Todd Gillmor, San Jose; Vice-Presidents Martin Green, Blythe; Ridley Smith, Santa Ana; Vern Huck, Los Angeles; A. Carl Dwire, Oxnard; John Morris, Palo Alto; John Kidd, Merced; Charles Aiman, Walnut Creek, and Robert Brooks, Alturas; Trustees Albert Raymond, Anaheim; Carroll Nordquist, Pasadena; Paul Sanchez, Santa Maria, and Charles Reynolds, Vallejo.

Concise, well-phrased reports outlined the steady progress of California Elksdom which enjoyed a net increase in membership of 4,000 candidates in the past year with seven lodges instituted. Charitable expenditures totaled more than $672,000 with the lodges' cash and bond assets audited at well over $200,000.

California's youth activities were at a high level during the past 12-month period, with 297 applications for Elks National Foundation Scholarships received and a total of 11 girls and 11 boys rewarded. The sponsorship of 145 athletic groups by the lodges found the junior baseball teams in the favored position. The Elks of this State are responsible for 191 Boy Scout units, in addition to Girl Scout, Campfire and Boys State groups. Youth Leadership Contest participation continues to increase in popularity in the Gold Coast State. During the Convention at which Arizona State Pres. Kenneth Crowder, Ariz. No. D.D. Duncan G. Graham and Past Grand Est. Lead. Knight M. H. Starkweather of Tucson were guests, many competitions were held, with El Centro capturing the Ritualistic title over Sonora. Long Beach Lodge won the softball tournament and San Bernardino's sharpshooters took the pistol match. A record 800 Elks entered the three-day handicap bowling tournament played at two San Diego bowling centers. Los Angeles took home the team trophy while Oxnard Elk Walt Dailey was named undisputed singles champion. Wally Temblin and Bud McCurdy of Whittier paired up for a win at the Hillcrest Alleys, and Walt Peale and Matt Soares of San Pedro took the doubles at the Tower Recreation Center.

A parade depicting California's history and witnessed by 75,000 persons brought the enthusiastic conclave to a close on a gala note. Led by the Marine Corps Recruiting Depot Band, the pageant's hundreds of marching units and 29 musical contingents, including many youth bands and divided into eight sections, took nearly three hours to pass.

ALASKA ELKS VOTE FOR C-P MOBILE UNITS

Perhaps the most important decision reached by the delegates to the 8th Annual Alaska Territorial Elks Assn. Convention at Seward Oct. 6th, 7th, and 8th, was the one which authorized the use of mobile units, similar to those utilized in California and other States, in connection with their Cerebral Palsy Program. It is the Alaska Elks' intention to have the first unit on the road by next month, operating in the western section of Alaska in which a number of cities and rural communities can be reached by road. Additional equipment, which can be transported by the therapist to those areas of the territory accessible only by air, will also be purchased.

Highlight of the Convention was the presentation, by an authorized representative, of each lodge's contribution to the Cerebral Palsy Fund which, for the second year, reached a figure of more than $32,000. The donation was accepted by Robert D. Lewis, Chairman of the Cerebral Palsy Commission.

In attendance with the Order's new Grand Tiler, M. E. Monagle of Juneau, for the express purpose of aiding the Association to establish firmly this Major Project were Chairman Edwin J. Alexander of the Lodge Activities Committee of the Grand Lodge and F. George Warren, Vice-President of the Washington Elks Assn. which has made such great strides in a similar effort.

In addition to a parade on the 6th, in which most of the lodges represented participated, many pleasant social activities were enjoyed, and there was a splendid attendance at the Memorial Services on Saturday morning, which were open to the public.

Grand Tiler Monagle was elected President of this organization which will meet next October at Juneau. Other officers are James Nolan of Wrangell, and Vincent W. Root of Kodiak, Vice-Presidents; Matt Onkka of Palmer, Quentin DeBoer of Petersburg, and Hollis Heinrichs of Cordova, Trustees; Richard W. Smith, Anchorage, Secy.-Treas., and Norval Kane, Anchorage, Historian.

BIGGEST CONVENTION IN COLORADO ELK HISTORY

Registration for the four-day 1955 Convention of the Colorado Elks Assn. at Grand Junction topped 1,900, to make it the best attended in Association history.

Special guests at the late September 52nd Annual Meeting were Grand Exalted Ruler John L. Walker, and Past Grand Exalted Ruler Floyd E. Thompson who gave a fine address at the opening ceremonies.

During the final session, the delegates made a $10,000 donation to aid retarded children; the money will help support Elks Laradon Hall at Denver, an outstanding Colorado Elk project. John Godec, Jr., Chairman of the Hall Committee, reported that the Elks of his State had contributed nearly $30,000 to this fine school during the past year.

In the same period, it was revealed by State Charity and Welfare Committee Chairman J. Walter Socha, these generous 29,062 Elks had turned over $205,778.66 to charity and welfare—a per capita representation of $7.08.

Loveland Lodge which will be host to the 1956 Convention next September won the State Ritualistic Contest in which 14 teams participated. Pueblo Elksdom took second place, over the defending championship team from Greeley. Grand Junction and Colorado Springs entries followed in that order.

Donald L. Johnson of Montrose succeeds H. G. Downs as President of the Assn. Other officers are Robert L. Barth, Brighton, 1st Vice-Pres.; Byron A. Anderson, Denver, 2nd Vice-Pres.; Frank H. Buskirk, Montrose, Secy.; Eugene M. Welch, Grand Junction, Treas.; F. Eugene Crawford, Canon City, five-year Trustee; C. B. Millen, Brighton, Chaplain; Robert H. Allen, Creede, Sgt.-at-Arms; G. J. Morgan, Loveland, Tiler.

COOPERATIVE JANUARY CLASS

The Lodge Activities and the State Associations Committees of the Grand Lodge have joined forces in working toward a really outstanding initiatory tribute to the Order's State Association Presidents during the month of January.

All lodges should do their utmost to make each State President's Class one which truly reflects their appreciation of his work for Elksdom in their State.

Alaska lodges give $32,000 to their Cerebral Palsy Fund. Left to right: Grand Tiler and new Assn. Pres. M. E. Monagle, Trustee Quentin DeBoer, D.D. Orville Paxton, Fairbanks E.R. E. P. McCarron, Juneau E.R. R. O. Faulkner, retiring Pres. Orval Thurman, C-P Commission Chairman R. D. Lewis, Kodiak E.R. John Gibbons, Palmer E.R. Russell Felzien, Seward E.R. Delmar Zentmire, Anchorage E.R. R. B. Smith; Grand Lodge Committee on Lodge Activities Chairman E. J. Alexander.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Lodge's officers and the 14 men they initiated last September.

Springfield, Mass., Lodge's Youth Activities Committeemen A. F. Santinelli, Chairman Kenneth Hanks, G. W. LaFleur and G. A. Shannon, left to right, with the stencil through which the admonition it offers was applied to the sidewalks at every exit of some 66 schools in the area. This practice was adopted this year by the Committee to augment its fine School Safety Program.

Houston Host to Texas Southeast Elks

Representatives of all but one of the lodges of Southeast Texas were in Houston for the meeting called by State Vice-Pres. Ed. F. Burgdorf in conjunction with the Clinic conducted by D.D. G. M. Brassard.

State Pres. E. C. Bunch outlined his plans for the year, following which other State Association work was discussed.

At the conclusion of the session, a supper and floor show were enjoyed.

Top Links Aces on Terre Haute, Ind., Elk Green

When Terre Haute Lodge No. 86 held its 11th Annual "Coon Hunt" at the Elks Fort Harrison Country Club, the highlight of the affair was a golf exhibition put on by two of the Nation's greatest players. Dr. Cary Middlecoff, well-known Memphis dentist who captured the 1955 Masters Tournament at Augusta paired off with local golf star Warren Artz, and Julius Boros, erstwhile National Open title-holder and winner of the rich "All American" tourney at the Tam-O-Shanter Club in Chicago last summer, teamed up with Gene Verostko, Terre Haute's match-play titlist.

The match, which lasted only five holes before a downpour stopped operations drew a crowd of 3,000 and followed a golf clinic during which the two greens giants displayed their artistry.

General Chairman for the entire event, an all-day affair which attracted over 5,000 to the club and is held annually for the benefit of the Elks charity program, was P.E.R. Dr. Glenn D. Irwin, with E.R. Dr. Merle Drew supervising the proceedings. Dr. Middlecoff had his Manager, Early Maxwell, with him and Boros was accompanied by Arthur Witzleben, representing his sponsor, the George S. May Company of Chicago.

All were luncheon guests of the Elks and the Terre Haute Chamber of Commerce, whose Pres., Elk Joseph Quinn, was also on hand.

When the Chicago White Sox played the Boston Red Sox at Fenway Park in Boston, the Elks of Massachusetts paid tribute to the visiting pitching ace, Dick Donovan, a member of Quincy, Mass., Lodge. Pictured with the "Quincy's Dick Donovan Day" tags distributed at the game are, left to right, State Assn. Pres. Michael J. McNamara, Hobart K. Robinson, a prominent Quincy sportsman, and P.E.R. George C. Fay of Quincy Lodge, Co-Chairman of the well-attended program.

Practically everyone has done something to help the flood victims in the Northeast, including the Elks of Norwich, Conn., one of whom was Earl B. Whitehead, pictured curb-side, in the clown make-up he wore in his march from Norwich to Putnam, with his dog Fuzzy, collecting funds for the flood sufferers there. When he arrived Mr. Whitehead was able to present nearly $185 to Putnam Lodge's E.R. Glenn C. Mauer. It took Mr. Whitehead ten hours to make the 36-mile trip, carrying his slit-sealed collection bucket.

Springfield, Mass., Elks Enlarge Safety Program

The Youth Activities Committee of Springfield Lodge No. 61 did an outstanding job last year in the distribution of School Safety Stickers.

This year, the group not only distributed 2,500 car-bumper stickers reading: "School Is Open, Drive Carefully," but interested other lodges to emulate the program, resulting in the placement of 6,500 additional stickers.

Their own program was enlarged this year by the addition of pavement signs reminding the children at 66 schools to STOP, LOOK and WALK.

THE BUSIEST BUILDING IN WINSTED

THERE IS PROBABLY more neighborliness per square foot in Winsted, Conn., than in any other town in the country—and a lot of it is just inside these doors.

The hardest-hit community in the Northeastern flood area, Winsted has learned the meaning of cooperation, with the Elks at the top of the class.

Their building was one of the few spared when the raging Mad River swept death and havoc along its path. No sooner had the flood waters receded than Exalted Ruler John W. Winn ordered the facilities of the building to be placed at the disposal of Army personnel called in to enforce military law. The officers bunked in the guest room, the enlisted men in the lodge room. When they left, Army engineers moved in while they erected Bailey bridges in town.

Hundreds of men were brought to Winsted by the power and telephone companies. Since no recreational facilities were available, they were invited to spend their leisure hours at the lodge building. Gratefully they enjoyed warm fellowship and hospitality during their stay.

As the town began to rebuild, local merchants whose stores had been wiped out looked around for temporary locations. What happened? Elksdom opened its doors and Main Street moved in.

A United Cigar Company agency set up operations in the foyer; not far away three barber chairs were installed and Michael Adamo, Salvatore Santoro and Salvo Paxcia, owners of the West End Barber-shop who had lost everything but their skill, are keeping the townsmen well groomed under the shadow of the antlers.

Inside the lodge room are the racks of Smith's Men's Shop run by Cy Hamilton, and of the Modern Dress Shop whose merchandise is handled by Mrs. Frances Leshay for her son Bernard while he assists in rebuilding his gutted Main Street store. Maney Leshay, her husband, was one of two Winsted Elks who perished in the flood.

Just a few feet away is the temporary home of Sexauer Jewelers, and operating in the basement is Winsted Motor Sales, Inc., whose stocks and buildings valued at $200,000 had floated away.

Several of these merchants appear here with E.R. Winn, center foreground, and Mayor P. Francis Hicks, right, a Winsted Elk.

Yes, thanks to the Elks, business in Winsted is going on as usual.

YOUTH PROGRAM

GRAND LODGE
Youth Activities
Committee

Benevolent
and Protective Order of ELKS
of the U.S.A.

An outline of comprehensive program detailed in Youth Committee brochure

IN ACCORDANCE with Grand Exalted Ruler John L. Walker's "Plan Elksdom's Progress" Program, Chairman Dewey E. S. Kuhns of the Grand Lodge Youth Activities Committee has well under way a comprehensive and constructive project for the adoption of all lodges and State Associations stressing (1) a well-balanced, year-round youth program (2) outstanding Youth Leadership Contests on local, State and National levels, and (3) the observance of Elks National Youth Day on May 1st, 1956.

Each lodge and State Association has its own Youth Activities Committee led by an interested, capable member, whose names and addresses have been supplied to the Grand Lodge Committee. Mr. Kuhns has sent to each Exalted Ruler, State President and the Chairman of every lodge and State Association Committee a copy of his very complete brochure, a 24-page booklet carrying an introduction by the Grand Exalted Ruler, outlining the year's program and listing the awards, deadlines and other salient information necessary to the conclusion of what promises to be an outstanding year of Elk effort in behalf of our young people.

To coordinate this work, the country has been divided into five sections, and the list of States to be handled by each Committeeman can be found in this brochure.

AWARDS EXPLAINED

The lodge selected by each State Association as having conducted the best youth program for the year will receive a beautiful plaque carrying a large metal medallion, the Youth Committee insignia, mounted and engraved. That lodge will be the State's entry in the national competition and is a contestant for the National Champion Award—a handsome, engraved trophy which will be presented to the individual lodge winner at the Grand Lodge Convention in Chicago next July.

The judging in the National Champion Contest is to be completed by the Grand Lodge Committee by June 1st. Therefore, the State Associations must have the program on their outstanding lodge in the hands of the Grand Lodge Committeeman Charles C. Bowie, 217 No. Sam Houston Blvd., San Benito, Tex., by May 10th.

In addition to the above awards, the Association which demonstrates the most outstanding Youth Program on a state-wide basis will be judged for award on the basis of activity within the State among its lodges. Each State Committee is to submit a digest of its achievements to the Grand Lodge Committee, including activities on a State Association level as well as evidence of promotional accomplishments within the State. This is to be supervised by W. L. Hill, 2317 Fourth Ave., So., Great Falls, Mont., who must have the complete file on each State by May 15th.

YOUTH LEADERSHIP CONTESTS

Not to be confused with our Scholarship and Most Valuable Student Awards sponsored by the Elks National Foundation, are the Youth Leadership Contests, to be conducted on a local and State level, with the selection of three National Youth Leaders, for both boys and girls, by a special board of judges.

All young people who will be under 19 years of age on July 1st, 1956, are eligible; entry blanks will be made available, on request, by the National Committee which recommends the awarding of worthwhile prizes to the local leaders by each lodge, suggesting U.S. Defense Bonds as most suitable. Through the cooperation of the Elks National Foundation which has allocated to this phase of the Order's work the sum necessary to purchase $8,500 U.S. Bonds, the Grand Lodge Committee is furnishing substantial awards for the six National Leaders, plus a $100 Bond to each State winner, to whom the Committee suggests each Association grant additional awards of its own. The National Awards, all larger than in previous years, are a $1,000 U.S. Bond for each girl and each boy in first place; a $500 Bond for each girl and each boy in second place, and a $300 Bond for each girl and each boy in third place.

ELKS NATIONAL YOUTH DAY

May 1st will once again be devoted to paying tribute to our young people, with special public ceremonies to be sponsored by the lodges at which it is suggested that local youth leaders be honored. Youth Day promotion will be conducted on a contest level, with recognition and awards to those lodges submitting evidence of the best and most constructive program.

State Associations are urged to become active promoters of Youth Day on a state-wide basis, and those which present evidence of the finest promotion will also be recognized and rewarded.

Lodges and State Associations must file their Youth Day reports with Brian M. Jewett, Woolrich, Maine, by May 15th.

OTHER IMPORTANT DEADLINES

Failure to adhere to the deadlines may disqualify a worthy contender. In addition to those given above

FEBRUARY 15th must see all local Youth Leaders certified to each State Association Youth Committee.

MARCH 10th must see the State Youth Leaders (one boy and one girl) certified to the Grand Lodge Committee.

The Elks are Pitching—for the Kids

For many years, our lodges have sponsored junior baseball clubs. The tremendous growth in the popularity of this youth activity—represented in this, the first of several, selection of photographs—will be the topic of an article to be published in your Magazine with the opening of the 1956 baseball season.

Left: Royal Oak, Mich., Lodge, has sponsored a baseball team in the Midget League in the City Recreation Program for the past five years. At present two ex-Midgets are in the Minors, under contract to Baltimore. The city's pride and joy is Norm Zauchin, League graduate who is regular first baseman for the Boston Red Sox. Pictured here are the current Elk hopefuls.

Below: Three years ago Haywood Scott, Guy D. Moore and R. D. Wade, P.E.R.'s of Joplin, Mo., Lodge, formed a Little-Bigger Baseball League, now known as the Babe Ruth League. A team sponsored by the lodge has been State Champion ever since, and last year won the State and Regional Championships and participated in the Little World Series. The boys are State titlists this year, too. They are photographed with E.R. Brice Crouch and Youth Committee Chairman Curt Wiggins, P.D.D. Moore who is State Director of the League, and other League and team officials and managers.

Playing under Little League rules, these boys grace the diamond nicely for the Elks of Alexandria, La. The city's outstanding Little League All-Stars put Alexandria in the news this year by capturing the Region 7 championship of the Southwest and competing in the Little World Series.

In the Doghouse

You can diagnose distemper if you know the symptoms—but treatment is for a vet.

I HAD COUNTED ON A CHEERFUL VISIT with Jim and his pretty wife and some good food, too, because the aforesaid queen of my friends' affections was an artist of no small ability with a skillet. Aside from my own home, it was one of the few places where I could be sure of what went into the hash. But when I arrived the gloom was almost as tangible as a fog. The cause was the death of their dog, a pet which they had cherished for years. Had I not a deep fondness for them, instead of sympathizing, I would probably have said to myself, "It serves you right." But at such a time you don't say things like that to people you really like.

"Ed, he was more than just a dog to us; why, it was as if he belonged to the family".

Now I've heard this said before and my reaction has invariably been, "All right, you now say you thought of your dog as a member of the family, then why, when you clearly knew you had a sick dog on your hands, didn't you take 'him' to a dog doctor? Would you have withheld proper medical attention from a human member of the family, just to save a few dollars? Of course you wouldn't". Veterinarian fees are by no means excessive and the small savings might mean life or death for the dog.

This is not an exaggerated case but one that any professional dog writer will confirm. It is amazing to what lengths some people will go to try to save a few dollars by home doctoring a dog. Barring infants, any adult or child who can speak can tell what hurts and where. But a sick dog can only lie in misery wholly dependent upon the compassion of its master or mistress who sometimes will try any home remedy that suggests itself, or is recommended. Equally amazing is the surprise of the owner when his pet dies. Only a skilled vet can properly diagnose the sickness of a dog and even then, because of the dog's inability to talk, there are times when the vet has to indulge in a little guesswork. However, with the great advances made in animal pathology and, still are being made, more and more the treatment of dog sicknesses is becoming better understood.

My friend Jim, an otherwise kind, considerate and intelligent man, waited until it was too late to take his dog to the vet.

Result: he and other members of his household are inconsolable. The only suggestion I could have made but withheld was to get another dog and get one soon. But then, as the vet had told Jim that his dog was a victim of distemper, I advised that he consult the vet as to when it would be safe to introduce another dog into the home. I'm of the opinion that my stock has fallen a bit as my counsel was regarded a bit on the callous side.

DISTEMPER is one of the most contagious diseases afflicting dogs. Unfortunately, it is all too common. It is believed that with few exceptions nearly all dogs, unless they are isolated from other dogs and animals, are exposed to distemper virus. Its symptoms generally resemble those of human influenza, although other symptoms may prevail. The best safety measure is to have the dog inoculated with serums of vaccines. Any incompetent veterinarian can give the inoculations and they are very helpful.

There are two methods of inoculation. One is the one-shot treatment which confers temporary immunity to a degree; the other, and more lasting, is the three-inoculation method. Frequently, kennels when advertising their dogs, state that they have been distemper inoculated, but this may mean only that the dog has been given the one-shot treatment. The reputable kennel will not mislead the buyer into thinking that the three-inoculation method has been employed. Nor will such a kennel advertise inoculated dogs when the shot hasn't been given. There are many kennels that do not inoculate their dogs since they do not have the necessary equipment or skill and are reluctant to spend money for vet fees on dogs they offer for sale. For this the kennel cannot be criticized. After all, once the buyer takes possession of the dog he is entirely responsible for its well-being and health.

Self-claiming baggage service now is in effect at 23 stations of United Airlines. Instead of presenting checks to porters, arriving passengers pick up their own baggage from open racks. Checks are turned in upon leaving the baggage claiming area. By this method baggage is picked up 50 per cent faster than by the traditional and often inconvenient porter-fetching method.

The Cumberland Gap National Park was established on September 14th this year and its 20,100 acres make it the largest historical park in the United States. Its site extends from the outskirts of Middleboro, Kentucky, to Cumberland Gap, Tennessee. The land is rich in history and was contributed by Kentucky and Tennessee.

A timely note from Benjamin Washstrom, P. E. R. and present Secretary of New Orleans Lodge No. 30, reads in part, "Mardi Gras comes early this year, beginning on February 14th. At this time we have received letters from several out-of-town Elks who advise that they have been unable to obtain reservations at the hotels for the event. We have, of course, made arrangements to secure the best accommodations available for all inquiring Brothers, but it would facilitate matters if we heard from interested members as early as possible." He suggests that members avoid the last-minute rush, if they plan to visit New Orleans at Mardi Gras time.

The bell rings for two minutes at noon every day, and its tones reminds everyone on both sides of the Iron Curtain of the principles of Freedom.

Following this visit the Grand Exalted Ruler flew to San Diego, Calif., to attend the California State Elks Convention, as reported elsewhere in this issue. After the Convention, Mr. Walker went to Montana, where, on October 10th, he visited GREAT FALLS LODGE. While there Mr. Walker particularly praised the Montana State Elks Assn.'s new program of sponsoring speech and hearing therapy traveling units in their state. The Grand Exalted Ruler had the opportunity to inspect one of the units while in Great Falls. The unit, a station wagon completely equipped for its work, was driven from its headquarters in Billings by the director of Speech and Hearing of the Montana Crippled Children's Society. The project is sponsored by the Montana Elks bad news for you."

She was small and slim and fair, and now she sat on the sofa, drying her hands on her apron. She said, "All right, Harry. What is it?"

How could you say it gently? But he tried. "I'm going to be arrested tonight."

And she tried to smile, but it was a pitiful effort. "You're joking, Harry. A parking ticket?"

He said, "No", and saw the old fear walk into her eyes. The fear that had been so bright in them once before and which had gradually faded until it had disappeared.

A long moment passed before she said, "It was so far away and so long ago."

He nodded, his thoughts going back to that town in another state where unhappiness had haunted them. The firm he'd been working for had shut down, and it had been the City's single big industry. Kate had been sick, and Ned, only a year old, had been sick. So you used what money you had, and then you used the unemployment insurance, you borrowed on your life insurance, and you borrowed what you could from friends almost as broke as yourself. And the bills continued to be much more than you could handle.

So one night he had broken into the

"FREEDOM'S FACTS"—Reds Fear Exposure

Some time between now and next summer the U. S. Supreme Court is expected to make a decision which will profoundly affect the fight against communism in the United States.

Officially, the case is listed as the Communist Party of the United States of America versus the Subversive Activities Control Board. Actually, it involves an appeal by the Party from an SACB order directing that it register itself and its members under the Internal Security Act of 1950.

The order was issued by the SACB in 1953. The U. S. Court of Appeals upheld the order by a two to one vote in December 1954, and now the appeal has reached the Supreme Court. If the Supreme Court upholds the SACB order, the Party will be forced to register itself and all of its members within thirty days following the decision, or face penalties up to $10,000, each day of non-compliance counting as a separate offense.

If, on the other hand, the Supreme Court decides against the SACB order and declares that the Internal Security Act of 1950 is unconstitutional, as the Party is urging, a major sector of the fight against communism will have to be rebuilt.

What The Act Provides

Essentially, the Act, popularly known as the McCarran Act, requires registration with the Attorney General of all communist-action organizations and their members and of communist-front organizations and their officers. These organizations must file periodic financial statements and identify all their literature. Contributions to them are not tax-exempt.

The Act also set up the SACB as a five-man board appointed by the President to determine whether an organization could be designated as communist-action or communist-front. The SACB acts only on petitions by the Attorney General directing an organization to register.

Hearings on the first petition, involving the Communist Party U.S.A., began on April 23, 1951. On April 20, 1953, the SACB found that the Party acted in all ways as an agent of the Soviet Union and operated on a secret basis to conceal its foreign domination.

On the same date, one of the SACB members pointed out that the purpose of the Act was not to punish or to outlaw the Communist Party, but to publicly identify it and its members as agents of a foreign government. Many Americans acting as public relations representatives of such countries as Pakistan and Liberia also are required to register as foreign agents.

But conditions are different with conspirators. The Reds, whose primary tactics in the United States are the manipulation of front groups and secret infiltration into non-communist groups, fear exposure in their true light. And the Party is fighting the McCarran Act with every force at its command. The Party claims that the Act regiments speech, press and assembly; censors dissenting expression; suppresses voluntary association; and denies individuals their livelihood.

The "Daily Worker" states, "Anonymity of membership in unpopular groups and especially minority parties is indispensable to freedom of political action." In this one statement the Reds admit that if the American people would identify them, their political effectiveness would be largely destroyed.

The foregoing is from the current issue of "Freedom's Facts," a monthly bulletin prepared by the All-American Conference to Combat Communism. The BPOE is one of fifty national organizations with membership in the Conference and, because of the important anti-communist writing in "Freedom's Facts," is publishing excerpts each month.

big gas station on the edge of town. It had been ridiculously simple. A jimmed window, a cash box that invited opening, and five hundred and fifty dollars. After that it had been simply a flight from their small furnished apartment, putting what personal belongings they could into the old car. And because they had been a small, inconspicuous family and there had been no reason to suspect him, they had travelled far.

He remembered that night on the road, when he had told her why they were leaving, and what he had done, and why they had to change their name. She had sat in the moving car for ten minutes without speaking, and then she had said dully, "All right, Harry," and had never spoken of it again. But the fear had been heavy in her eyes.

Kate's hands were still wrapped in her apron. "How did they find out, after all this time?"

He told her of the circumstances of the last evening. "I was as surprised as Joe to see the picture. I can't figure out how they got it or how they connected me with the thing. But they did."

His wife leaned back tiredly. "It's been good for us here, Harry."

He nodded without speaking. It had been very good. They didn't have much money and they would probably never have a great deal, but they had enough. He had worked up to a nice job and he knew he could keep it as long as he wanted to. All of which had been true up until last night. The kids liked Hill City, and there was Rotary, and he was chairman of the Community Chest. There was the church, and the bowling club . . . but what was the use of continuing the litany?

His wife said, "How could Joe Moran do anything like that to you? You go on fishing trips together. He's Lucy's godfather. You play cards together once a week. My God, they eat here, and we eat in their house!"

"You know what Joe is like. That's one reason we like him so much. He's right off the top."

"I can't believe it," his wife said.

Hamilton sat there for a moment. Maybe Joe Moran wouldn't blow the whistle. Maybe these good years they had shared so closely would make the difference. Maybe. But he didn't think so. He got up.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR SUBMISSION OF ELK MEMORIAL SUNDAY AND CHRISTMAS REPORTS

Again this year, the Lodge Activities Committee of the Grand Lodge invites the lodges to submit reports on their Elk Memorial Sunday programs and Christmas Charity activities for its consideration as to the most outstanding. The three top programs in each of three groups will be recognized with the presentation of special awards.

DO NOT send material on either of these events to the Magazine.

ELK MEMORIAL SUNDAY

In accordance with tradition, the memory of Brothers who have passed away during the year will be honored on December 4th.

As soon as possible after that date, photographs and a full account of your program should be submitted to Committeeman Joseph F. Bader, 279 Travers Place, Lyndhurst, N. J.

All reports must be in his possession not later than December 20th.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS

To be sure your lodge's Christmas Charities are given the opportunity to win an award, complete accounts, with photographs, must reach Robert G. Pruitt of this Committee, 808 Southern Railway Bldg., 99 Spring St., S.W., Atlanta, 3, Ga., by January 13th. Details on any Thanksgiving charity programs sponsored by your lodge should also be included with your report.

"There are a few things I have to do. I'll be back in a minute. Try to figure something out."

But how could you salvage anything from a mess like this?

MORAN sat on the porch of his house and watched Chestnut Street fill slowly with shadow. There had been bad days before, but none so tough as this. He'd been sitting there for a long time, trying to come to a decision. He was quite sure what he'd have to do ultimately, but he'd rather cut off an arm. There was an out, of course. He could play for a little while at being God, but that would shade all future actions and nullify completely all the past.

He shifted his glance to the Hamilton place next-door. Rob and Lucy were playing with the collie pup, and he remembered the shouts of delight when he'd brought it over, a couple of months ago. He remembered, too, that Harry had borrowed his mower last week, and now his own lawn needed cutting. He'd have to get it back. A fine gag. You locked a guy up and then got your mower back.

He had been shocked when they had come across the picture, last night. He had tried to conceal his surprise and he thought he'd been successful. Maybe, he had thought then, there had been a mistake. He'd go back to the picture and the story himself, later. Harry hadn't said a word, and Moran wasn't sure that there had been anything unusual in his manner.

So he had checked after Harry had left headquarters. There was no mistake. It was Harry, all right. The face was younger, and there was the mustache, but there was the same little scar on the left cheekbone, too. And he had read the notice. Harry Humiston— He'd changed his name to Hamilton and shaved his mustache, that was all. But he must have glanced at this picture many times before, and it had rung no bell. Without Harry's face beside his own, he'd never have recognized the faded, somewhat blurry print as that of his next door neighbor.

Harry was wanted for the burglary of a gas station, seven years ago. The robbery had been unwitnessed, but there had been fingerprints around. They had made the routine check with the Armed Forces file, and sure enough he had been in the Army. They even had his picture. An indictment had been handed up, but they had never found Humiston.

So he'd had to find him. The man lived next door and he was as nice a person as you would be likely to meet. He fished well and played a good game of cards, and his kids and your kids grew up together. He even had loaned you money, on a tough occasion, and you'd eaten his bread. And then you had to lock him up. It was a little meaty.

His wife came out onto the porch. Nelly was tall and dark and slim, and when she grinned at him he felt fifteen years young.

er. She said, "Make us a drink, Joe. The kids have worn me down. They've been in and out all day."

He made the drinks and brought them out to the porch. The street was almost fully in shadow, now, and in an hour it would be dark. He handed Nelly a drink and sat down heavily. "I have trouble, Nell."

"Bills?" she said. They frequently had trouble with bills.

He shook his head. "I have to arrest Harry Hamilton."

She stared at him for a moment. "You must be out of your silly little mind."

He told her the story slowly, and when he had finished he lit a cigarette and took a long draw at his drink. His wife sat silent, looking at him. In a moment she said, "Suppose you just ignore the whole thing? There isn't a chance of anyone else seeing the picture, is there?"

"Not much of a chance. I recognized it only because he was right there with me. I looked directly from his face down at this old photo."

She said quietly, "Forget about it, Joe."

"I'd like to. God, how I'd like to!"

"They eat with us," his wife said, and her voice was becoming unsettled. "Their kids are practically our kids. Kate just made me a dress for my birthday. She took care of me for weeks after Willy was born." She was crying now.

"If I forgot about it, there would be other things," Moran said slowly. "You know how I feel, Nell. I've never taken so much as a cigar. I don't make the laws or the circumstances. It's probably the only time he's ever taken a dollar that didn't belong to him. But how do I know?"

"He's a good man," his wife said. "You can tell that. Forget about it, Joe."

He got up and strode along the porch. "I don't know! I don't know! I don't know what to do about it!" But within himself he knew what he was going to do, what he had to do.

His wife stood beside him, and suddenly her arm was about his shoulders. "You do it your way. Whatever it is, I'll understand." She was crying quietly as she went into the house.

Moran crossed his own lawn and Hamilton met him at the low hedge that separated the properties. He said, "Hi, Joe," and Moran said, "Evening, Harry."

"You want the mower? I should have brought it over a couple of days ago."

"Yeah, the grass is running away with me." Moran lit a cigarette. He'd made up his mind. You can't dedicate yourself to one purpose, one way of life, for fifteen years, and then make a big switch. The Lord knew there were times he had been tempted, but never like this. On the other occasions, money had been the consideration and he had resisted easily and wrathfully. This was a lot different. But he couldn't change.

He suddenly flicked the cigarette out into the street. "Harry, I didn't come over about the mower. I. . ."

Hamilton held up a hand. "Whoa! I know what you're going to say, Joe. You don't have to bother."

"I wish I didn't, but. . ."

"I called them," Hamilton said. "Not fifteen minutes ago."

Moran stared at him. "You called who?"

"Your boys," Hamilton said, and his grin was white and sickly in the dusk. "I told them who and where and what and when. I figured I'd save you a little trouble."

Moran was silent for a long moment. "How did you know I recognized the picture?"

Hamilton looked out into the street. "I wasn't positive, but I couldn't take a chance. It would be a hell of a thing, you locking me up." He tried to grin again.

Moran cursed softly. "You're a fool. No one but me would have known that picture. There isn't another guy at headquarters who would. . ."

Hamilton's voice was soft with friendship. "But you would have taken me, wouldn't you, Joe?"

Moran looked at him, then nodded. "Yeah, Harry. I would have had to."

"Sure," Hamilton said. "But I like to think you wouldn't have been crazy about the job."

"You know all about that," Moran said, and he thanked Hamilton in his heart for not having forced him to hammer home the nails. He said, "What about the money?"

His heart went up three feet when Hamilton said, "I returned it three years ago, when Kate and I took the trip to New York. I mailed five hundred and fifty in bills to the oil company, with a printed note."

Moran's mind was working fast, now. "All right. That's a big thing. I don't think they'll even go to the bother and the expense of extraditing you. And I went to school with the head of the State Police in. . ." He named the state. "He can do a lot of good. And I'll go down and post your bail for tonight." He was beginning to feel a lot better already. "I know a lot of guys on the papers, and I think they'll keep quiet."

Then he saw the plain police sedan coming down the block. It headed in to the curb, and Moran put his arm around Hamilton's shoulder and they walked together to the car. He saw that it was Reese and Deegan, a couple of his own men. They did not get out of the car.

Moran said, "Harry, you may not know it, but you're a big little man in this town. The Community Chest, the work you did on the hospital drive. You think people forget about things like that? You'll probably never spend a day in jail, and if we're lucky no one at all is going to learn about this."

Hamilton said, "Joe, I don't know how to say it, but. . ."

Moran leaned down to the car window. He said to Reese, "Take good care of my friend, Jimmy. And keep this quiet."

Reese nodded, and Hamilton got into the back seat. As the car drew away, Hamilton said, "Don't forget the mower, Joe."

Moran walked back to his house. Through the intensity of his concentration he became aware of his wife standing on the porch. He patted her shoulder and kissed her on the nose. He said, "It's all right, Nelly. I think everything is going to be all right."

He watched her walk across the lawn to the Hamiltons' place, and then he went inside and started to make the many phone calls. He felt sure that it would be all right.

The Elks and the Boy Scouts

land in helping them to become scouts.

The Past Grand Exalted Rulers were Judge James T. Hallinan, James R. Nicholson, and the late Murray Hulbert. Governor David Scholtz and Colonel Charles Hart. The Boy Scouts were represented by Byrnes MacDonald, a member of the National Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America. It was very fitting that Mr. MacDonald should take part in this meeting as he was known to all the P.G.E.R.'s as the man who conceived of, organized and promoted the Police Athletic League during the administration of Fiorello La Guardia as Mayor of New York City.

I was there in my capacity as the National Director of Civic Relationships of the Boy Scouts of America. In this position it was my duty to act as liaison officer between the Boy Scouts of America and the heads of all the great civic organizations, amongst which we considered the Elks one of the most important.

Somehow or other I knew that the outcome of that meeting would be favorable to the boys of America.

These men represented an organization founded on deep devotion to America, made up of men who themselves had struggled in their early years. Any opportunity that would serve America, and help American boys, would find enthusiastic supporters among the leaders of the Elks.

Sure enough, the outcome was favorable. At the next meeting of the Grand Lodge in Portland, Oregon, in 1947, a resolution recommending the program of Scouting to all subordinate lodges was passed unanimously.

Things began to happen fast. Lodges over the years had been sponsoring scout troops but there had been no concerted effort to increase the number. At the end of 1945 about 250 lodges were active in scouting; in the next five years this number doubled and at the end of 1954 forty per cent of all lodges were actively and enthusiastically engaged in operating troops.

But this was just the beginning. One of the great stories in the annals of the Boy Scouts of America tells of the attempt of the Local Council in a large southern city to do something for a large number of boys who lived in a Scout District that included the city's downtown area.

It seems that several efforts to get scouting started in that district had failed. One day at a meeting the Exalted Ruler of the Elks Lodge heard the story and offered the help of the lodge. The lodge took over the complete responsibility for the organization and supervision of scouting in the District. At first the going was very tough.

The Exalted Ruler and the Scout officials made an effort to get some of the citizens of the community to become members of the District Committee, and although this is the customary method of organizing a committee, it failed.

At a meeting of the Lodge the matter was brought up for discussion by the Exalted Ruler, and at the end of a very strenuous and informative session the members decided unanimously to constitute themselves the District Committee.

Then and there, the Exalted Ruler picked six men to be chairmen of the six operating committees of the district, and authorized each one to fill his committee from the members of the Lodge. Finally, he picked one man to be the Scout Commissioner.

Through the enthusiastic support of the members of the lodge and the inspired leadership of the Exalted Ruler, success was achieved. Not alone did they organize the District, but it finally became the best of all the Districts in the council.

This is the only known instance in the 45-year history of the Boy Scouts of America where a single organization has taken over the responsibility for a whole district.

Then there is the matter of finance, and here again the Elks have done something unusual. The program of scouting is operated through Local Councils. The whole of the United States is divided into 540 of these Councils. Each Council raises the money for its operation in the council territory. All the money raised comes from voluntary contributions, from individuals, groups and organizations. Of the many organizations that contribute, the Elks have been among the most generous.

Previous to 1946 the lodges throughout the country contributed about $25,000 a year. This amount has increased steadily year after year, until in 1954 the amount was estimated to be nearly $250,000; ten times what it was eight years ago. This is probably the largest amount contributed by any National Organization to scouting locally.

When a boy talks about scouting—he is thinking of camping. And of course, this is a very important phase of the Scouting program. Nearly every Council in America now owns and operates at least one camp, so that every boy who becomes a scout has an opportunity not alone to have a very economic vacation in camp, but has the opportunity to go to camp as often as he wants for week ends; or other periods.

The purchase, construction, maintenance and supervision of these camps involves a great deal of time and money. Here again the Elks have established an enviable record. In many parts of the country they have taken a leading part in the raising of money to purchase these camps. In many instances not alone have they helped raise the money, but have actually taken an active part in the erection of the buildings on the camp sites.

Once every four years there is a meeting of scouts from nearly all the countries in the world. This is called an International Jamboree. It is the hope of every scout that he will get a chance to go to one of these great events sometime during his scouting career. They are usually held in foreign countries so it takes a lot of money to get there. It is always more than the average boy can afford. There is a danger that only the sons of the rich will get a chance to go. This is avoided by the generosity of various individuals and organizations who contribute some of the expense of sending one or more deserving boys to the Jamboree.

MANY Elks lodges have been instrumental in sending under-privileged boys to many of these affairs. I recall that a lodge in the middle west made it possible for a crippled boy to attend the Jamboree in Austria two years ago. This was a thrilling conference for this lad—it was a very generous act on the part of the lodge.

One of the great problems of the Scouting organization is the matter of making it possible for boys to join. There is no problem of getting the interest of the boys. For instance, this year, about 1,500,000 boys will reach the age of 11—that's when they can become scouts. Of these, one million will express a desire to become scouts, but, and this in my judgment is most unfortunate, only 500,000 will actually be able to join.

This always seems extraordinary to the average person to whom I speak. They don't see why all boys, that want to, can't become scouts. However, when it is explained to them they see the logic of it.

You see, a boy does not simply join the Boy Scouts. He has to join a troop. This troop can exist only when some organization takes on the responsibility of sponsoring it. The job of the scout council or the scout district is to find sufficient number of worthy and competent sponsors, such as fraternal and civic organizations, churches, and schools that will assume this responsibility.

Over 75,000 such groups are now sponsoring scout units. Many of them sponsor two or more, so that at the end of last year there were 97,000 scout units operating. The total number of boys in these units was over two and a half million, and there are 975,000 men who give leadership to these units on a voluntary basis.

Yet, in spite of this, there is still a tremendous need for more sponsors. It is estimated that it is necessary to have 25,000 more troops to meet the demands of boys that now want to come in to the movement.

And, with the boy population increasing at the rate of 7 per cent a year (and so far as we can see this will continue for at least 10 more years), it will be necessary to have 150,000 Boy Scout troops.

Out of this need for many more troops, many plans for recruiting sponsors have been devised. One of the best, and one in which many of the Elks lodges throughout the country have taken the initiative, is called the "Together Plan." Here's how it works. A survey is made of a territory where there is need for a large number of troops. The names and addresses of possible sponsors, such as the churches, schools and civic organizations, are listed. A letter is sent to the heads of these groups, inviting them to send a representative to a dinner meeting where the need is explained; the method of organizing the troops outlined; and they are requested to consider the sponsorship of the unit.

These meetings require a great deal of planning and must be so organized and managed that success is assured. It takes money to finance them. The most successful way to do this is to ask one of the outstanding organizations in the neighborhood to accept the responsibility for the project. Because of their interest in the community, many of those who are asked, and accept, are Elks Lodges.

A lot is being heard now about delinquency. As in all other crises that arise in this country, a lot of foolish statements are being made, as well as a lot of wise ones.

Most people do not pause to analyze what is being said. Many don't even know what the technical definition of delinquency is. When they read about the great increase in "juvenile delinquency," they have visions of a great increase in "criminals." As a matter of fact, the percentage of criminals amongst the modern youth delinquents is not nearly as high as most people imagine. There has been an increase in the number of criminals; there is not much that the average person can do about that; they are the concern of expert criminologists. But what the average person or organization can do is to help the boys who live in or near the delinquent areas, where they are compelled to associate with criminals, to see a better way of life, and to save them from joining these delinquent gangs.

One of the best ways is to help these "border-line" boys to join some constructive group, such as the YMCA, the Boys' Clubs, and, of course, a Boy Scout troop.

Because of their well-known interest in doing something for "less-chance" boys, Elk lodges in many parts of the country are doing an outstanding job in this phase of scouting. I am convinced that many more would if they knew of the need and could be shown the way.

From time to time I am asked the question, "But doesn't it take a lot of money to sponsor a troop?" When you see how much the successful troop does for its members, you would naturally expect it to cost a lot of money. On the contrary, the actual cash outlay is very small. In most cases, $25 to $50 per year is all that a sponsor needs to budget for a well-run troop. One of the principal things that Scouting teaches boys is self-reliance, and all scouts are urged to earn money for themselves to buy their uniforms and pay a small weekly fee into the Troop treasury for incidental expenses.

SOME sponsors help scouts obtain uniforms and equipment by advancing necessary funds with an agreement that the boys will earn money to repay the advance. It costs so little to belong to the Scouts that no boy need be deprived of the benefits of Scouting because of money.

The most important contribution of the lodge is the time of the members who volunteer to supervise and run the troop.

"But," it will be asked, "how does the scout program help the boy?"

About 50 years ago during the Boer War, a general in the British Army, Robert Baden-Powell, who was besieged by the enemy in a small town in South Africa was so hard pressed for personnel that he had to draft the small boys in the besieged town to take on some of the heavy and dangerous responsibilities of the defense of the town.

The result was a great surprise to the General. He was amazed at the response. These lads not only served faithfully and efficiently but were constantly asking to be shown new skills that might make them more helpful. When the war was over, Baden-Powell wrote an article in a London paper about his experiences, telling of the fine things the boys had done. The reaction to this article was phenomenal. Not only did he receive requests from heads of all kinds of organizations who were looking for a program for their boys, but he received thousands of letters from boys asking him to show them how they could learn the skills that he had taught the boys in the besieged city.

To answer all the letters, he started writing a series of articles called, "Scouting for Boys." Out of this grew the great International movement of Scouting that now is in operation in 60 different countries. In the United States, over 25,000,000 men have had this Scout training. Its phenomenal success is due to the fact that the program is full of opportunities for boys to do the kind of things they naturally want to do—camping, swimming, hiking, playing and having fun together. While they are participating in these activities, they are being taught a code of ethics that they easily understand, willingly accept, and enthusiastically practice. In after years most of them acknowledge that this code was one of the important influences in their lives.

The code of ethics:
*"On my honor
 I will do my best
 To do my duty
 To God and my country
 And to obey the Scout Law.
 To help other people at all times
 To . . . ."*

Nearly everyone in America knows the Scout oath. How wonderful it would be if nearly everyone tried to live up to it!

The Scout Law:
 "A Scout is trustworthy.
 A Scout is loyal."
 There are twelve of these laws. The last one,

"A Scout is reverent."
 Today, wherever you go, where men are associated together in organizations of responsibility and leadership you will find that the majority of them were trained in Scouting.

Seventy per cent of the members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce were former scouts. Sixty-three per cent of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy; sixty-eight per cent of the cadets at West Point.

During the second World War the mere fact that a boy had attained the rank of Eagle Scout assured him of a position of leadership and responsibility in any branch of the Armed Services, and in many cases led to a commission as an Officer.

The young officer mentioned in the beginning of this article stated that the training he got in Scouting and the attainment of the Eagle rank was the major factor in helping him to win his Commission in the Navy.

We live in a precarious time. If it is uncertain and disturbing for us adults how much more unknowable and doubtful must it seem to young men and older boys. A long life of experience with young people has taught me that next to his home and church there is no greater steadying influence in the life of a boy than that of a man who will act as a wise counselor and friend.

Many people talk of the problems and faults of youth, too few do anything about it. Many do not know what to do, some have found a way. There are many ways; it is no idle boast to state that one of the best ways will be found in the program of Scouting.

Rod and Gun

"Why ah'm still pastoring the church down the road. You know," he went on, meditating, "ah know all the best hunting and fishing country in Florida. Ah pastored a church way up north, near the St. Johns. Ah pastored a church in the lakes country. Ah pastored a church down here. Why ah've pastored a church everywhere there's birds or bass!"

"Where would you say there's good bass fishing near here?" I asked.

"Bass fishing? Ah'll tell you. Go out the canal from Moorehaven to Okeechobee," he instructed. "You'll pass an island and come to a big bay with a creek coming into it. That's what they call Fisheating Creek. It's a clearwater creek. Why you can see those bass come for twelve feet to hit your plug! That's the place!"

I've always had a feeling the pastor knew what he was talking about, but there is no end of excellent bass water in the state, such as the Kissimmee River, which also flows into Lake Okeechobee, of Lake Kissimmee, or Lake Apopka, or the Myakka River, or the Withlacoochee River, and many, many others. No matter where a person might choose to stay in Florida, he can find bass fishing not too far away.

THE DRAINAGE canals along the Everglades, mentioned earlier, provide some very unusual and spectacular fishing. Land reclamation in general is the worst thing that can happen to game and fish. Drainage projects of any kind normally spell disaster, but these canals are the exception that prove the rule. The vast Everglades—about eight hundred square miles of swampland at the southern end of the state—are teeming with a swarming mass of living things: fish, birds and reptiles. The shallow, warm water and the constant sunshine make the ideal combination to create and sustain primitive life. But the Everglades, as anyone who has traversed them knows, are hardly the place for a tourist fisherman.

Black bass will be found only in the sweet-water ends of these canals. Wherever the water is brackish—which might be a good many miles from the sea—there may be tarpon, snook, redfish, mullet and other inherently salt-water species, but no bass. But where there are bass and bream, there are lots of them. They are not as large as those found in the deeper lakes and rivers—a five-pounder is a big one—but they are plentiful.

Of course there has to be some sand in the sugar. Canal fishing is, conveniently, a foot proposition, and the sand in this case is the cottonmouth water moccasin—although, even if he is classed as a deadly poisonous snake, he is more of a mental hazard than an actual one. I have seen hundreds of them deep in the 'glades and a rare one or two near a roadside canal. As a result I have no fear of them. I respect the lethal power of a diamondback, but find a moccasin only repulsive, and this because of his appearance. The only real danger from a cottonmouth is that he is so slovenly that a fisherman could possibly step on one inadvertently and be struck. If anyone is going to be this careless, he should at least step on the snake near its head. As one old cracker put it, "Ah just grinds their heads into the dirt with mah bare heel."

A far more real hazard to Florida bass fishing is an innocuous-looking object called a water hyacinth. This is a small, floating water plant with a light-blue, spiked flower which, I suppose, could be considered pretty by people who like light-blue, spiked flowers. The story of the hyacinth as I understand it is that a man living on a lake near the St. Johns River imported a few of the plants from their native India about 1890. He thought they would beautify his lake. In no time they not only beautified it, they filled it full from bank to bank, like a carpet. Some of them either overflowed into the St. Johns or the gentleman in question dumped them there in a futile attempt to be rid of them. In any case, within ten years the Department of Agriculture began to seek a means of controlling the prolific plants because the great masses of them were interfering with navigation and recreation along the St. Johns. The Federal government, the state of Florida and private landowners are still trying to keep them in check, without success.

Nine times out of ten when the natural flora or fauna is interfered with by the introduction of a foreign species, it is eventually regretted. Witness, for instance, the starling, the English sparrow and the German carp—and the hyacinth.

The rafts of hyacinths covering hundreds of acres of water have made large areas unfishable. Since they are free-floating, they shift with the wind on large bodies of water. A man might start out one morning and find that he can't get within a quarter-mile of his favorite fishing hole. Yet, as big a nuisance as the hyacinth is, there is still plenty of available bass water and bass in Florida.

My favorite way of fishing for Florida bigmouths—or any bass, for that matter—is with a surface lure. I like to tease them with a top-water plug, and I enjoy seeing the strike as much as any part of bass fishing. There are days, of course, when they won't come on top, and there are places where the weed growth makes such a lure impractical. When this is the case, the surest type lure in my experience is of the weedless-spoon and pork-chunk combination. Or, if not that, a pork chunk alone on merely a weedless hook, or any of the several varieties of weedless pork-rind hooks, or imitation pork-rind wigglers.

A bass-fishing friend of mine says he has discovered the final answer to this bass fishing business. He uses a pork chunk on a weighted, weedless hook, but the secret is in the method. He allows it to sink after his cast until it comes to rest; then he retrieves it slowly, dragging the chunk along the very bottom. They eat it up, he says. I intend to find out about it the next time out.

Any bass fisherman going to Florida should take time out to visit one of the well-advertised giant springs where through an underwater porthole he can observe bass going about their daily affairs virtually as though he were in the same medium with them. Maybe he will find out something about fishing. A fellow can often learn quite a bit just sitting back and watching. In any case, he will find it interesting to break the barrier of elements between himself and the fish and to watch how a bass makes his living.

One thing I learned at such a spring is that a bass's aim improves with age. A swarm of small bream had been attracted by some bread crumbs, and a pound-and-a-half bass tried desperately time after time to catch one of them. He missed so pitifully so often that he finally became discouraged and swam away as though sulking. Obviously, from that exhibition, it isn't always the fisherman's fault when he misses a strike. On the other hand, I kept my eye on a big eight- or ten-pounder wandering lazily in and out among scores of bream as though uninterested. Suddenly he shot ahead and engulfed one so deftly that it was difficult to follow the movement. He didn't miss. Why he passed up hundreds of others and chose that particular one I don't know, but I would like to know. Continued observation might give a hint to his important decision.

A peculiar thing is that the bream and other small fish do not appear to be particularly concerned about the bass. They apparently accept the hazard of their presence as part of a bream's life. Yet, when a big old alligator snapping turtle came lumbering along, every living thing gave him a wide berth. They all realize and respect the power of his jaws and the extent of his appetite.

An hour of watching fat-bellied old bass at such a spring will do one thing for a fisherman: it will make him want to get a rod in his hand and start for the nearest lake. He will know at a glance that there is some fine fishing to be had in Florida other than in the deep-blue sea. This fresh-water customer may not be as big or spectacular as his Gulf Stream cousins, but an eight-pound bass is quite a trophy at that. And, not to be disregarded, he is not a charter-boat proposition. He was put there for us rowboat fishermen.

Fresco Thompson

Amoros who made that amazing catch to start the ruinous (for the Yankees) double-play in the seventh game is also a Thompson production. The tiny Cuban wanted $1,000 to sign off a rough island equivalent of one of our own sandlots.

"Give it to him," ordered Fresco in a decisive telephone conversation with Brooklyn's on-the-spot Caribbean scout, Al Campanis.

Fresco Thompson, originally out of Centreville, Alabama, by the way of Chicago, St. Louis, and the Washington Heights section of New York City, is now a solid burgher of Freeport, Long Island. At 53 he has held on to his sense of humor. He's even an excellent listener.

Thompson has managed to laugh in situations, too, where other men would have let grandma have it right in the shins. He has also managed to survive several changes of top management in the Dodger set-up, which makes him a kind of a Dr. Karl Menninger able to quote the baseball rules book backward.

Humorous? Yes. Clown? No. Clowns don't wind up as chief architects of world championship baseball teams.

A Fresco-and-the-Dodgers history is pretty much a chronicle of the rise of Brooklyn from the status of a pre-war sports-page joke to the strongest team in baseball today. Fresco has been a part of the whole Wagnerian epic in Brooklyn.

He played second base for the Dodgers in 1931 under the famed Uncle Wilbert Robinson. The Robins (out of honor to Uncle Robbie) suffered from a painful attack of the shorts in two vital categories—finances and players. Also, sometimes they'd change presidents of the club without advising the manager.

Fresco managed in the Brooklyn organization under the brilliant but unpredictable head man, Larry MacPhail. He was the manager of the Reading, Pennsylvania, club which MacPhail bought from a disgusted absentee Maryland chicken farmer for $5,000. Included in the purchase price were 40 uniforms, 20 players and a 20-passenger bus still doing service today somewhere in the Dodger organization. So is one of the 40 players. You might have seen him on TV last October—Carl Furillo.

MacPhail went off to war and Branch Rickey took over as the No. 1 man in Brooklyn. Thompson managed in the upper echelons of the minors for the Mahatma. When Walter O'Malley, current panjandrum of the Brooklyn shooting preserve, bought out Rickey for a million dollars after the 1950 season Fresco stayed, although he was commonly regarded as a Rickey man. Moreover, in each succeeding switchover of power

Thompson has always moved up a notch or two.

The last boost moved him to vice-president in charge of farm operations and scouting. That is a job in baseball second only to the one occupied by the man who has to go ask the bank for additional cash.

Depending on the viewpoint, there could have been an even bigger boost for Fresco Thompson just a few months after his 50th birthday. When the time for Charley Dressen to leave after the '53 World Series, O'Malley's choice for field boss was Thompson. Thompson's choice was to continue as talent boss. So, O'Malley turned to the candidates within the organization, and that's why the picture of Walter Alston is adorning magazine covers this winter rather than Fresco Thompson's.

Why did Thompson turn down the job of piloting the most colorful club in baseball at what would probably have been a juicy boost to an already ample salary? It goes back to a decision made in the late years of World War II while leading a bunch of re-treads and 4Fs through the motions as the New Orleans entry in the Southern Association.

AT THE end of 1945, Thompson surveyed what had been seven or eight entertaining years of managing in the minors, from way down in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, up through Montreal. Fun? Yes, but fun's only fun. It was time to think of the future.

"I sat down and wrote Branch Rickey a letter," recalled Fresco, "and when I look back it was a pretty important one. I wrote him that I wanted to get somewhere in baseball where my own efforts produced the results, not where everything depended on a man who I had no control over, hitting the ball or making the right throw."

It was the big decision in Fresco Thompson's life. The sharpest brain in the business, whether it belongs to Casey Stengel, Alston, Mayo Smith, Marty Marion or Mike Higgins, to name some of 1955's more successful pilots, must go for naught if the hand of the man clutching the bat in that vital situation trembles at the crucial moment.

The minors, thought Fresco, had been fun, but now he was big-city minded. When there was a sudden desperate need for personnel in a place like Thomasville or Newport News, Fresco thought it would be nice if he was on the listening end instead of the beseeching one for a change, too.

Rickey also thought it a good idea. Thompson moved pronto into the more than slightly-frenzied atmosphere on the fourth floor of 215 Montague Street in downtown Brooklyn and has been there since.

Yes, the minors had been fun and there had been plenty of situations like those which had been used to point up the wise-cracking abilities of Fresco's in that previously-mentioned article. There was the time when a leading doctor-fan had been "riding" Fresco all season. Fresco maneuvered the tables on the medico in drastic fashion.

"I had a good boy pitching a two-hitter," smiled Fresco. "He had a two-run lead, but he gave up a single and a walk. I went out there to take him out. As I came out of the dugout this doctor, in a front row box, called, 'Another mistake, Thompson?'"

"I stopped right there. 'A mistake, doctor? Well, at least MY mistake will be able to work tomorrow.'"

Fresco thought back over the years. "You know that guy tried to get my job just for that crack. Claimed I was picking on him."

Then there was that triple play in Montreal. An eminent stockholder in the club was on hand and witnessed his first triple killing. The stockholder was a big man in the dry-goods business; in baseball he didn't know the difference between a fungo and a foul tip.

That didn't stop him. Next morning he was in the Royals' office bright and early. "Fresco," he offered sagaciously . . . "thees play I see las' night. . . . The one that gets trois hommes . . . beg par'on, t'ree men. A verr' good play. Yes! We can have lots more of them, oui?"

Enough of the past lest Fresco hurl that "clown" charge again. Clowns aren't charged with the dispersal of roughly eighteen per cent of every revenue dollar taken in by a major league ball club (double that if player bonus payments are included.) Clowns don't make decisions where not only the current financial health but the future personnel welfare of a major-league ball club is concerned.

Somewhere along the World Series trail in September you thrilled to the double-barreled victory performances of youthful Johnny Podres. There was a long chain of events which led to the pale-eyed lefthander's getting the Yankee one-two-three in the ninth inning of the seventh and final game of the World Series.

The chain had to start somewhere. It started with the decision to give the young man a thousand-dollar bonus to sign, and to throw in a small cash consideration for his father, who had been a high school pitcher before him for the same iron-mining community up in Northern New York.

Who made the decision? Put a couple of check marks alongside the name of Lafayette Fresco Thompson.

The name is legit, all the way, although the "Lafayette" has virtually disappeared. Once when Fresco was sold by Pittsburgh to Buffalo some acerbic Pittsburgh scribe scribbled, "Lafayette Fresco Thompson and all his names were released outright to Buffalo today."

The name has figured on the sports pages in one way or another for more than a quarter of a century. It started when he was named to the all-scholastic New York City team while playing for George Washington High School. It rings a bell in such places as Grand Island, Nebraska, Kansas City, Omaha, and such National League cities as New York, Brooklyn, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. It's a name most people couple with a sharp and ready wit. In retrospect a lot of people now pushing fifty or having traveled beyond that milepost are apt to say, "he had to be slick-talking; he wasn't much with that bat."

A base and base-less canard! Thompson, judged by today's standard, was an ample hitter. With the Phillies in four years his lowest mark was .282. How many teams today would turn down a .282-hitting second baseman who also knows what to do with a glove? Even in Fresco's last full year in the majors under Uncle Robbie in Brooklyn he hit .265.

FRESCO'S trouble was that he played with what was probably the heaviest-hitting second-division club in major-league history in Philadelphia.

"I hit .324 one year and I wound up as the sixth or seventh-place hitter on the club," he recalled. "They wouldn't even let me take batting practice. I wasn't allowed to speak to guys like Lefty O'Doul and Chuck Klein."

In Philadelphia, Fresco was named team captain, got an extra $500 for additional duties like carrying the line-up card out to the umpires. In later years he described his captain duties as something akin to being foreman of a WPA leaf-raking detail. And if this comparison means anything to you, you're starting to get up there in the years, too.

Fresco helped slice no World Series melons with the Phillies but he had fun. There were things like four-game series with the Pirates in which both teams scored in double figures in every game! There was also an opportunity to coach at third.

Fresco loved to coach, especially when they were playing Cincinnati and a large lefthander named Eppa Rixey was pitching. Rixey compiled a tremendous record for the Reds; he won more games than any other lefthander in National League history and some day he will grace the Hall of Fame. For Thompson, however, he was a sitting duck.

Rixey's trouble was that he was still fighting the Battle of Shiloh, almost three-quarters of a century after the final results were in. College man, too.

So one college man, Thompson (Columbia) went to work on another (U. of Virginia) and it was an awesome job Fresco did. Just by whistling. He whistled one tune over and over as Rixey sought to catch the corners of the plate. It wasn't even a new tune, just an old war ditty, "Marching Through Georgia." It drove Rixey into a positive frenzy and it didn't cool him any, either, to learn that the fellow doing the whistling was a native Alabaman.

It was through his Alabama connections that Fresco got his first job managing, just as he had used a rather close connection—his father—to get a job playing with Grand Island in the Nebraska State League.

Actually, Fresco had first obtained a

Visiting the Lodges with John L. Walker

was on the 12th, when Mr. Walker spoke to a dinner gathering at WILLISTON LODGE. Exalted Ruler Herman Schmitz presided and among those who heard Mr. Walker speak was Congressman Usher L. Burdick, a member of Williston Lodge. Mr. Walker made a tape recording for Radio station KG CX and his speech was broadcast over station KEYZ.

At MINOT LODGE the next day Exalted Ruler L. Donald Thorson and other officers, along with a large turnout of members, greeted the Grand Exalted Ruler at a luncheon in the lodge's year-old half million dollar home, which Mr. Walker described as one of the finest new lodges he had seen. Later that day the Grand Exalted Ruler visited DEVILS LAKE and GRAND FORKS LODGES. As he departed the Grand Exalted Ruler commented on the vitality of Elks lodges in North Dakota and their many accomplishments.

On October 16th the Grand Exalted Ruler was guest of honor at a luncheon given at WATERTOWN, S.D., LODGE. Among the luncheon guests were Past Grand Exalted Ruler James G. McFarland, Glen S. Paterson, member of the Grand Forum and District Deputy Harold Ricketts, and Jack Hoffman, Esteemed Loyal Knight of Watertown Lodge. The latter two accompanied Mr. Walker on his tour of South Dakota.

That evening the Grand Exalted Ruler was honored at a dinner given by HURON LODGE. Exalted Ruler John Skvaril was host at the affair, which was held in the Elks ballroom at the Hotel Marvin Hughitt and was attended by several hundred members. Among the guests, in addition to the members of the official party, were Past District Deputy Fred D. Leach and State President Kenneth L. Roberts. The feature of the menu was a State Fair prize winning 4-H Club baby beef. The highlight of the event was a stirring speech by Mr. Walker.

The following day the Grand Exalted Ruler was entertained at a noon luncheon at MITCHELL LODGE. Exalted Ruler R. E. Morgan was present, as well as all the members of the official party.

job as an infielder with Cedar Rapids in the Mississippi Valley League. Got it, $150 a month and all, all by himself, just by writing and enclosing some of his all-scholastic clippings.

Fresco's father, a shoe buyer for J. C. Penney, however, had been at a convention at Atlantic City, had gotten to chatting about his son who, he boasted, was a professional baseball player. One of his listeners was the manager of the J. C. Penney store in Grand Island. He perked up his ears. He was also the president of the Grand Island ball club. "I'll take him," he said, with one eye on the talent aspect of the deal, the other on how it might help his business career.

How did the young man work his release from Cedar Rapids? Merely by writing and asking for funds to get there. His unconditional release came in the return mail.

The family angle bobbed up again in Fresco's first managerial job. In Birmingham he had an uncle who was a judge. The then-owner of the ball club was a lawyer. The judge's recommendations carried a lot of weight.

After Birmingham it was way stations like Hartford, Williamsport, into Brooklyn to help in the front office preparations for the 1941 World Series, then out to Reading where young Lee MacPhail, now farm director for the Yankees, had been installed as general manager by his father ("go down there as manager, Fresco, and help the boy out.")

MORE bouncing around on busses and always the conviction that his destiny didn't lie in the spiked-shoe department but in the front office. "I'd go to the winter meetings each year," observed Fresco, "and I'd see maybe fifty or sixty fellows who had managed the season before now standing around in the lobby looking for jobs. There'd be only one or two front-office fellows in the same spot. And they didn't have that desperate look, either."

Now the onset of World War II started taking its toll of baseball talent. In 1942, one week before the Dodgers' minor league training camp at Staunton, Virginia, broke up, Al Treadway, the manager of the Johnston, Pennsylvania, club in the Class C Middle Atlantic League, was drafted. MacPhail promptly drafted Fresco for the role. He spent the first couple of months worrying more about gas coupons and flat tires than about the club's won-and-lost record.

On Decoration Day that year Fresco wired MacPhail thusly: "Not having heard from you I'm going to pick a new manager from a hat and am coming home." That had results. A couple of days later MacPhail sent a relief and Fresco came back to Brooklyn.

Over the years Fresco has been on the receiving end of some pretty poignant wires himself. The Wisconsin State League is now extinct but the Dodgers once ran Sheboygan there when their farm system numbered as high as thirty under Branch Rickey.

The manager there was en route to his first pennant and was beginning to get a little nervous about it. He wired Thompson for a hard-hitting outfielder and a good righthanded pitcher. The records in the Brooklyn office showed the club was in first place by 11 games, had only 9 to play.

Fresco's return wire read: "Outfielder? Pitcher? What for? You can go fishing for the rest of the year and still win the pennant." He also treasures the memory of another plea for help which read, "temporarily in first place by five games but need help badly."

Life in Montague Street, together with flying trips to such outposts as Montreal, Mobile, St. Paul and Newport News to check on the progress of the local procurators, isn't one long laugh for Thompson. A comedian and nothing more would have laughed himself out of the job many years ago. Last September when the Dodgers were making merry in celebration of their pennant clinching in Milwaukee Fresco was just about as far away as a Dodger official could be. He was at Mobile on a trouble-shooting deal. Was he successful? Well, Mobile managed to finish fourth in the regular Southern Association season, came on to win the playoffs and then came through as the Dixie Series champion.

Running a baseball farm system, even after it's been cut from almost thirty to fourteen clubs, can be compared to something like handling the control tower at Chicago's Midway Airport with one hand. The other is playing a xylophone solo, of course. It ain't easy.

In Brooklyn it's especially difficult because there are two main objectives in the Dodgers' operation. If that reads like faulty grammatical construction, put the blame on Walter O'Malley's desk, not here. He's the head man.

One main objective is to develop players who will win pennants and world series championships for the Dodgers. That's fine and highly commendable, of course. The other main objective is to develop players of such excellence as to convince other clubs to part with large sums of money for them in the hope that they will help win pennants and World Series in their new surroundings.

Between these two goals Fresco Thompson does a daily tightrope stint. Isn't it easier because there are only half the number of clubs, half the number of players, there were to worry about four or five years ago? No, if anything it's tougher. Production on the top level has to be just as high.

Brooklyn, under O'Malley, has made no secret of the fact that its farm system must produce a surplus of players for sale to support the continued operation of the farm system to produce more players for further sales, etc., and here we go around again, boys. The gimmick is, of course, for the Dodgers to skim the

alive today

they went to their doctors in time*

Many thousands of Americans are being cured of cancer every year. More and more people are going to their doctors in time. That is encouraging!

But the tragic fact, our doctors tell us, is that every third cancer death is a needless death...twice as many could be saved.

To learn how to head off cancer, call the American Cancer Society office nearest you or simply write to "Cancer" in care of your local Post Office.

American Cancer Society

cream off the top with the Don Zimmers, the Don Hoaks, the Podreses, the Amorooses, the Spooners and the Craigs. And always there have to be the Irv Norens, the Chico Carrasquels, the Billy Hunters, the Sam Jethroes, and the Danny O'Connells available for sale to other clubs at large sums.

Brooklyn, according to O'Malley, is consigned to the have-not category until it gets a new stadium capable of holding those big 60,000 Sunday and holiday crowds. (Ebbets Field holds about 35,000 with the fire department looking the other way). Until that time, and perhaps after that, too, Fresco Thompson will have to keep those "two main objectives" in his sights constantly.

Lesser objectives consist of worrying about 39 scouts, 20 of them full-time employees, and what they're doing at the moment, whether they're in Mexico City or Mexico, Mo., in Caracas or in Carthage, Ill. Scouting isn't just the business of signing talented young men; just as important is the business of not signing talented prospects.

"If you sign every good-looking kid who comes along you have to go broke," declared Fresco. "If you miss enough you'll wind up in last place. This is the only business in the world where a young man is paid large sums of money before he proves his ability. You've got to learn to live within a cockeyed economic framework.

"Talent hunting, however, has its compensations. You go to camp in the spring and you see a kid you signed yourself or told some scout to go ahead and sign. He's grown a couple of inches and he can do things after a year or two he couldn't do when you first signed him. He's doing now what you thought he might eventually be able to do.

"It's a big kick. You see a boy who everyone else passed up and now he shows unmistakable signs of coming stardom and you feel pretty good. And then you see a boy who you paid $10,000 to and he's no better than he was when you signed him. And you know he isn't going to improve, either."

Brooklyn has to depend more on careful scouting than upon a fat checkbook for a fairly obvious reason. This doesn't cast a shadow on the abilities of non-Dodger scouts. Having the power to give a red-hot young prospect $75,000-$100,000 makes a scout's job tougher, not easier. You give away "x" number of $100,000 checks to kids who turn out to be duds and pretty soon the man upstairs goes and gets someone else to look the kids over. In the final analysis the business of knowing who not to sign shares equal billing with the ability of knowing who to sign.

Intangibles further complicate Thompson's job, along with that of every other farm director. Every letter, no matter how impossibly nutty it sounds, is subjected to careful scrutiny and investigation if it refers to talent. Every kid who asks for a "look" gets some kind of a test.

Why? Because while the $100,000 bonus boys grab the headlines the facts remain, and will continue to remain, that the bulk of the major league players still sign for nothing or almost nothing.

Fresco has his nose planted too deeply into reports, box scores, rules, draft lists, waiver lists, options and airplane and railroad schedules these days to get much of a chance to see many ball games. If he sees a hundred a year it's a lot. The minor-league encounters he witnesses on ratty infields under deficient lighting systems probably outnumber the major-league games three to one. His job is not to watch the major leaguers, however. He has to come up with the kids who will be playing on the major-league diamonds four or five years from now.

Baseball has been good to Fresco Thompson and Fresco has been good for baseball. In choosing it as his life's work, however, he was aware that he'd be at home far less than most people—like people, for instance, engaged in making penicillin, perusing gas meters or penning TV commercials.

It's had its compensations, though—Florida every spring, the President's box at the World Series, and enough money to send his only daughter, Ann, abroad last summer for a vacation.

Ann visited several places in Germany. She liked Heidelberg best, and the ecstatic post card she sent Daddy emphasized that there were 40,000 American GIs stationed there.

"Heidelberg! GIs!," snorted Fresco. "If it's GIs she wanted she could have taken the bus down to Fort Dix."

In the Doghouse

The three-shot treatment is given over a period of about three weeks and is said to confer about 97 per cent immunity. If the kennel says that it has had its dogs inoculated the buyer of the dog should get a kennel certification or a copy of a certification issued by the vet who was said to have given the inoculations. But inoculation or not there is no certainty that the dog will escape distemper—only that 97 per cent margin of safety. If the dog has not been inoculated the owner should bring that pup to a vet as soon as is possible after having purchased the dog. Fortunately, one attack usually brings life-long immunity.

This disease was noted early in the 18th Century and despite years of research it still remains a medical mystery. At Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, one of the leading centers of research into animal diseases, there is the Dog Disease Laboratory housing the most up-to-date scientific equipment and staffed by some of the nation's leading researchers. In that laboratory there are constant efforts made to find the causes of some of the most prevalent dog diseases and it is hoped that the virus of distemper may soon be isolated and a cure, or better course of a treatment, developed for dogs so infected. At present there is no known cure.

It is estimated that one out of every four dogs afflicted with this disease dies from it. Where or how the germ is spread is a scientific riddle. It is known that dogs, as previously mentioned, contract it from other animals, or even from the clothing of an owner of an infected dog. One instance I can recall is that of an owner of a kennel of some of the top-flight dogs of the show ring who didn't believe in inoculation of his dogs. There came a day when he visited a competing kennel where several infected dogs had been isolated. Upon returning to his own kennel it wasn't long before his dogs became infected. The carrier was his clothing. He lost more than $20,000 worth of dogs. The isolation of the sick dogs in the competing kennel did not eradicate the germ. A while back I mentioned that one attack usually, but not always, confers immunity. The reason is that the living virus of the disease remains permanently in the system and later exposure, as a rule, fails to create a second attack.

The symptoms appear in about one week, sometimes less. There usually is a high fever, a yellow discharge from the nostrils, inflamed eyes and scabby skin. The dog may frequently cough and be extremely listless. Loss of appetite accompanies an attack. The fever will run for three or four days and may end by the dog seemingly becoming normal. After an interval of about three days, if it is true distemper, the symptoms will return, this time considerably increased. The owner who gives more than casual attention to the pup will always have a thermometer at hand as temperature is one of the reliable indications of a dog's health. The average, healthy pooch will register about 100.5 degrees. If this climbs to 103°, the dog should be carefully watched. If the thermometer reads 105°, pneumonia or distemper are most likely to be present. At 107° the dog is through with this world.

Guard Against Impostors

For the past few years, The Elks Magazine has viewed with no little alarm the operations of a ring that has been selling fake membership cards to confidence men and other unscrupulous persons.

These individuals pose an immediate threat to our members with whom they come in contact and a more remote threat to our Order itself. Not only do they cheat members out of a substantial total of money annually, which is an important item, but they sow seeds of distrust of all visitors to a Lodge home which could ultimately wipe out the warm spirit of friendliness and hospitality which now exists in our lodges toward all visiting Brothers.

Your Magazine has already done effective work in warnings against these dangerous impostors. In the Confidential Bulletin we mail to every Lodge Secretary monthly, we have focused attention on impostors who hold the fake cards sold by the ring, and have helped Lodges to bar the doors to many of them.

It must be admitted, however, that it is becoming much more difficult to alert our Lodge officers to impostors. The cards they carry today no longer are crude affairs with tell-tale features such as a different type face from that used on our official card. These imitations are now photographic reproductions, facsimiles with virtually no key to their spurious quality.

Your Magazine feels that it is time to direct a warning to Elks individually to be on guard against impostors. Don't let them take you in with their promotional schemes.

You realize that we can do little more than pass along "a word to the wise," which we trust will really be "sufficient."

Impostors defy classification. They come in all shapes and sizes. They come singly and in groups of two or three. Often, only the principal makes himself known to you, while the confederates lurk nearby to take the money swindled from you and your friends and spirit it away, thus removing the evidence.

Usually these swindlers get off scot free. No one wants to publicize the fact that he was a sucker.

Armed with a warning and some background information, it shouldn't take long to run these swindlers out of Elk fraternal life.

To accomplish the purpose, the warning should reach out to every member of our Order. In your conversations with other members, please refer to this announcement and ask them to be sure to read it with all their attention. It is only by unified action that we shall make it unprofitable for impostors to cross an Elk threshold. In this action, every member has an important part.

It is difficult to manage a two-handed policy of turning in the direction of hospitality and good fellowship for visiting Brothers, and in the contrary direction of swift justice for impostors. But with a little finesse all of us can do both jobs well. We can be pleasant to all visitors, and keep an eye trained for any who step out of line.

Picture frames you can make with hand tools.

BY HARRY WALTON

FRAMING YOUR OWN PICTURES gives you a custom job every time. The choice of proportions, molding styles and finishes is all yours, at low cost. Good picture frames can be made with hand tools alone. If you have a circular saw or shaper, you can even make your own moldings.

BUYING FRAME STOCK. You may not be able to buy prefinished frame molding locally. It can be purchased by mail from such dealers as Albert Constantin and Sons, 797 East 135th St., New York 54, N. Y. This kind saves you the trouble of finishing, but restricts you as to choice and costs considerably more. Some lumber yards carry unfinished frame molding. Oak is popular and lends itself to interesting modern finishes. But if your yard has no frame molding, look over the ordinary builder's moldings it stocks. Common base trim, for instance, has a pleasing shape. What is called drip cap makes excellent modern frames.

FORMING THE GLASS RABBET. Ordinary moldings have no rabbet or corner into which to set the picture. If you have a circular saw, it is easy to cut such a rabbet. Set the fence first to cut the inside of the rabbet as in Fig. 1. Then move the fence away from the blade a little at a time to remove the waste by successive cuts.

If you have no circular saw, pick a molding on which you can build up a rabbet as shown in Fig. 2. Buy an equal length of thin stock such as lattice strip,  $\frac{1}{4}$ " to  $\frac{1}{2}$ " narrower than the back of the molding. Apply glue to this and to one side of the strip. Tack together temporarily with brads, driving these only part way. Wipe excess glue from the inside of the rabbet and the outer edge.

When the glue has set, pull out the brads and, if necessary, plane the strip flush with the outside edge.

A plain smart wooden frame can be made of clear  $1\frac{1}{4}$ " by 2" or 3" stock with a strip glued on for a rabbet and one or both corners rounded with a plane and sandpaper. For deep frames, you can use large cove molding. If the edge is not thick enough to cut the glass rabbet in, or you have no circular saw, plane one edge of lattice strip to 45 degrees as in Fig. 3 and glue it on.

Frame members must be mitered—the ends of all four pieces cut at an angle of

45 degrees. The picture or mat dimension is therefore measured inside the glass rabbet as shown in Fig. 4.

A miter box (which you can buy for less than a dollar) and a backsaw should be used if you cut the molding by hand. It is common practice to lay a piece of wood under the stock to avoid cutting into the bottom of the box.

Cut one end first, being careful to have the sharp point of the miter on the outer edge. Measure from the end of the rabbet and clamp a stop block to the bench top so that, with the cut end against the block, the mark will come under the blade, which must now be in the other groove of the miter box. Return it to the first groove to make the end cut on the second member; then butt this against the stop and use the saw again in the other groove.

This will assure you of identical lengths for two opposite sides of the frame. You will have to reclamp the stop block for cutting the other two sides, unless you are making a square frame.

Use a wooden auxiliary head and a stop block on the miter gauge of the circular saw, swinging the gauge to the opposite 45-degree setting for the second cut on each piece. (Flat stock could be flipped over with the gauge left in one position, but the rounded face of molding makes this inadvisable.)

Deep frames, for which the molding must be sloped rather than flat on its back, are more difficult. If the molding is not too wide, the ends can be cut to the correct angle by holding the stock in the miter box at the angle it will assume in the finished frame. To do this you may have to insert strips beneath or behind the molding, or both.

It is possible to cut stock for such sloping miter joints with the molding flat on the circular-saw, but both the blade and the miter gauge must be set according to a table of compound-miter angles if this is done.

Instead, you can tack a flat, straight strip of wood, a trifle thicker than the glass rabbet, to a base strip and place the molding on both as in Fig. 5. Then carefully cut the molding at the usual 45 degrees.

WOODEN MITERBOX like this costs little. To cut frame members to exactly identical length, clamp both the box and a stop block (arrow) to the bench. Cut one end of molding; then butt this end against the block to cut the other end as above, using second miterbox slot. It's a good idea to clamp or wedge the molding itself into the box if possible.

JOINING THE CORNERS. Seal the cut ends with a thin coat of glue, and then apply a second coat for joining. Clamp one piece to a flat surface (use soft pads to avoid marring the molding.) Place the other piece forward of the corner as in Fig. 6. Driving the nail will force it into alignment.

An assembly jig makes the work easier. The photo below shows a homemade one, as well as a method of truing up defective miters.

SIMPLE ASSEMBLY JIG is made by nailing a square-cut piece of plywood and two lengths of 1" stock to a flat surface. Place glass rabbet of molding on plywood. Clamp molding by driving paired wedges together. A defective miter can be trued by running the backsaw through it as shown. Cut off the corner of the plywood (arrow) to give saw room to cut.

Slip feathers (Fig. 7) join corners without nails. Clamp two pieces at 90 degrees and saw across the corner. Apply glue to the saw kerf and the feather—a thin piece of wood—and drive it in so that the grain runs across the joint. Trim the corners of the feather flush afterward. Figure 7 also shows two other common fasteners, either of which may be used alone.

PICK YOUR FINISH. Sand the molding really smooth if you want a good finish. For modern blond tones, use clear lacquer, white shellac or non-darkening varnish. Apply undercoat and enamel for color finishes. White-painted frames can be antiqued by brushing on raw umber or burnt sienna oil paint thinned with turpentine, and then rubbing off most of it.

For a pickled finish on oak, brush on white. Rub off all but what remains in the grain. Then apply a clear sealing coat of lacquer or shellac.

TEXTURE FINISHES. Unusual effects can be achieved by brushing on white primer and, while it is still wet, sticking on pieces of lace-cut paper napkins or doilies, or even real lace, as shown in a photo. When this is dry, brush

TEXTURE TREATMENT enriches cheap lumberyard molding. Real lace was applied to piece at left, strips of paper doilies to the others. Center molding was gilded all over. The other two were highlighted with gold. For polychrome effect, use several colors. Touch only the high spots, using a brush with very little paint on it. If result is too colorful, you can subdue it by brushing on grayed white and wiping it partly off.

on a second coat. Color highlights may be added as described in the caption for the photograph above.

MOUNTING THE PICTURE. The mat and glass should be no more than  $\frac{1}{8}$ " smaller than the rabbet each way. To keep the picture dustfree, you can seal the edges of the glass-picture-backing sandwich with gummed or adhesive tape.

Set it into the frame and drive in brads or glazier's points to retain it. Close up the back by pasting wrapping paper over the entire frame. Sprinkle the paper with water, and on drying it will stretch drum tight. Attach the hanging wire or cord to screw eyes or flat metal hangers nailed or screwed to the frame.

Furniture Standoffs

Help to Save Walls

Every time somebody sits down on a chair, couch or sofa placed along a wall it tends to slide back a trifle until some part—usually the top of the back—touches the wall. This may damage the plaster or the wall finish, besides forming a dust mark that will be prominent when the furniture is next changed around.

Homemade blocks will end this annoyance. With the furniture placed so that no part of it touches the wall, measure the distance from the rear legs to the baseboard at the bottom of the wall. Cut two tapering pieces of wood 2" longer than this (a single slanting cut will make both from one piece of plywood or a wide board). Notch the narrow ends to fit the legs, and drop the blocks into place, wide ends against the baseboard. The furniture will never touch the wall again.

Foil Wrapping

Keeps Paint Brush Soft

When work on a paint or enamel job must be suspended, you can save yourself the trouble of cleaning the brush by wrapping it in aluminum kitchen foil.

Work out excess paint first. Then wrap the foil tightly around the brush from the ferrule down as shown, using a piece big enough to extend well past the bristles. Fold this end up tightly. Use fresh foil and crease all folds tightly just once; the object is to make an airtight envelope. A properly wrapped brush will stay soft three days or more and can be unwrapped and put to work again to finish the job.—Harry Walton.

LEE DONALDSON

In September, Lee Donaldson completed twelve months of service as Grand Secretary of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

That was sufficient time for the members of the Order, very generally, to realize that a most able and worthy successor had been found to fill the place left vacant by the death of the beloved Ed Masters who had served in that office so efficiently for 26 years. This was to be expected, however, because Brother Donaldson came to the Grand Secretaryship remarkably well equipped to meet its responsibilities and administer its affairs.

It is important that the Grand Secretary work in the closest cooperation with the Grand Exalted Ruler. We know that the two Grand Exalted Rulers with whom Brother Donaldson has cooperated will speak only in the highest terms of the intelligent, continuous and loyal support they have had from him.

The Grand Secretary finds that most of his contacts, aside from that with the Grand Exalted Ruler, are with Chairmen of the Grand Lodge Committees, the District Deputies, the Presidents of State Associations and the Exalted Rulers and Secretaries of the 1,746 lodges.

All of these positions Brother Donaldson himself has held and that most creditably.

Strikingly important among his contacts are those with the lodge Secretaries. For this he comes incomparably well equipped as the result of the many years he served his own lodge of Etna, Pennsylvania, in that capacity. Evidence of the success in this vital part of his work is most gratifying.

So long as Lee Donaldson is Grand Secretary we can all know that the office will be diplomatically and effectively administered.

EDUCATORS AND EDITORS

In 1954, members of the National Education Association and members of the Magazine Publishers Association held, under the auspices of the bicentennial celebration of Columbia University, the first formal meeting to consider their mutual problems, the mutual responsibilities of the schools and the magazines.

A second conference held this year is reported as having carried forward many of the aspirations springing from the first meeting.

The part that each can play was well illustrated by

N.E.A. President, Waurine Walker, when, offering a thanks of the teachers for the "many constructive and informative" articles on education which have appeared in the magazines, she said:

"It is appropriate that we examine and strengthen the very base upon which our freedoms rest, a literate citizenship.

"Our responsibilities might be compared to opposite sides of the same shield. We teachers help our people become literate. You, the writers and publishers help to keep them so."

Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board of Magazine Publishers Association, said:

"Magazine publishers generally regard their periodicals as media for public service rather than purely business. In fact, I do not know of any publisher who has been continuously successful unless he has followed such a philosophy.

"Since we regard the magazine as a great educational institution, we seek close and sympathetic cooperation of the teachers and with organizations for formal education.

"This seems like a natural and a valuable cooperation." We fully agree with Mr. Fuller's concluding statement.

MOLOTOV'S MISTAKE

The last of the old Bolsheviks holding high place in the Russian government which followed the revolution of 38 years ago in which he was a reasonably important participant has been told to admit that eight months ago he made an "ideological error" that was

"theoretically and politically dangerous". He has made the admission and apologized.

This mistake he made was in nearly telling the truth when truth-telling is not a practice in the Communist party.

He said last February that "the foundations of a socialist society have already been built" when he should have said, according to the rulers of the Communist party, the entire structure was completed.

The question now seems to be, shall the man who has been the foreign minister of the Soviet Union for many years be liquidated as was Beria or will he suffer the indignity and humiliation of demotion as did Georgi Malenkov, demoted from Premier to supervisor of electrical industrialization.

Perhaps the answer to this question will be at hand before this reference to the possibility reaches our readers.

Whatever it proves to be may it contribute strength to the fast weakening "Geneva Spirit".
